POTPOURRI

The Carnegie Commission, in its latest report, recommends a deeper university commitment to urban problems. In The Campus and the City: Maximizing Assets and Minimizing Liabilities (McGraw-Hill) the Carnegie Commission suggests that this commitment must involve direct forms of service as well as research and study projects. Student space is a particularly pressing need: open admissions must be expanded, and opportunities for reasonable citizen participation in urban higher education were found to be seriously deficient. . . . Tuition at state-supported schools has never been an easy thing to determine. And it is harder now than ever. State-supported colleges and universities have ordinarily charged out-of-state residents higher tuition. But it is increasingly difficult to determine exactly what an out-of-state resident is. The argument of many students is, on the surface, compelling: they pay state income tax, are registered to vote within the state, and hold a state driver's license. Higher tuition, seen in that context, constitutes a violation of the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment. But state-supported universities, if denied the right to charge higher tuition to out-of-state students, may lose considerable amounts of money -- this, in hard times. Now the Supreme Court has agreed to hear a Connecticut case involving the whole controversy and the results -- whatever they are -- could have a profound effect upon the future of higher education in the United States. . . . Brown University is implementing a new "Resumed Education Program" to give men and women who never completed work for a college degree the chance to return to their studies. The new program has been approved on a six-year experimental basis by the Brown faculty, and is the only one of its kind in the Ivy League. Students can take as long as they like to complete degree requirements -- an unusual feature -- and must complete a minimum of 16 courses, the equivalent of two years of study at Brown. The program will enroll students who have been away from formal education for a period of at least five years, and although the university expects the majority of applicants to have some college credit, the program will be open to those who have never attended college. . . . Mike Royko, columnist for the Chicago Daily News, takes off after "educatorese." He offers a sample from a Chicago school system bulletin: new positions for teacher-nurses "will provide teacher-nurses with an opportunity to participate in self-renewal activities culminating in a professional renaissance which will determine for those teacher-nurses their personal desire to pursue their reborn skills within the Disney setting or to elect to carry on those newly acquired skills in a setting other than Disney." Royko phoned the school for a translation and found that no one could really tell him what the paragraph meant. The sad fact is that this sort of jargon doesn't strike most of those involved in education as strange at all. (From University Today Newsletter)

CHARGE IT AT IUPUI

A credit card can get you into a class at IUPUI next semester. For the first time, Bank Americards will be accepted for fee payments by IUPUI. The credit cards may also be used for housing and for books and supplies at IUPUI bookstores.

Students over age 21 who hold that credit card may use them at registration without prior authorization. Students under age 21 may use their parents' card when authorized by the bank agent.

The credit card service was added to make it more convenient for students to handle university fees, according to Robert E. Martin, IUPUI bursar.

The spring semester at IUPUI begins with open registration January 8-9 at the Lecture Hall, 320 Agnes Street on the Westside campus. Classes begin at five IUPUI city campuses on January 11. Free spring class schedules, with information about admission and registration procedures, are available from the IUPUI Admissions Office, 1201 East 38th Street, and the Cavanaugh Hall Registration Office, 925 West Michigan Street.

PUT IT IN WRITING

Dr. Nancy A. Roeske, associate professor of psychiatry and director of the Riley Child Guidance Clinic, is the author of a new book, Examination of the Personality, which has just been published by Lea & Febiger, Philadelphia. The book, a primer which teaches the examination of mental status and personality structure of people, was written for medical students preparing for clinical medicine but can also be used by others in the allied health professions.

Dr. Phyllis I. Danielson, associate professor of art education at the Herron School of Art, reviewed a book called Art Education: An International Survey for the winter issue of Educational Studies.

Recent articles dealing with "environmental and maturational effects on brain biochemistry" published by Dr. F. V. DeFeudis, assistant professor of pharmacology, and his colleagues in the Institute of Psychiatric Research have appeared in Biological Psychiatry (June and August 1972), Experimental Neurology (July 1972), Brain Research (August 1972), Life Sciences (October 1972) and Neuropharmacology (November 1972).

"Signal averaging the human somatosensory evoke response: A focal evoked response?" by Hilton Stowell, Ph.D. (38th Street Campus) appeared in Psychophysiology, 9, 634-639 (1972).

Dr. A. K. Naghdi, associate professor of aeronautics, astronautics and engineering sciences and mathematics, has published an article in the November issue of the journal of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics. The title is "Torsion of Certain Prismatic Bars."

Work by Dr. Theodore W. Cutshall, associate professor of chemistry, and Dr. Peter W. Rabideau, assistant professor of chemistry, has appeared recently in the Canadian Journal of Chemistry.

HONORS & ACCOLADES DEPT .

Dr. Edwin L. Gresham, director of Indiana's first newborn intensive care unit at Riley Hospital, has been elected to membership in the Perinatal Research Society, a selective national organization limited to 90 members in obstetrics, pediatrics and basic medical sciences. Perinatology is a relatively new medical specialty which concentrates on problems occurring during the last months of pregnancy, at birth and during the first months of the infant's life.

Dr. Allan A. Katzberg, associate professor of anatomy, has been presented with the Aesculapius Award by Eli Lilly & Co. for his studies in wound healing.

David B. Webb, graphic arts supervisor in the IUPUI Publications Office, has been named winner of a merit award in the Gilbert Letterhead Design Competition for 1972. The winning entry was for the Marott Hotel Beauty Salon and was designed just before he joined the university staff last January.

Dr. Wm. Hugh Headlee, professor of parasitic diseases, has been elected secretary-treasurer of the Federation of Indiana Chapters of the American Association of University Professors.
