

Pres. hopefuls detail plans

By Bill Nolan

Candidates for Student Body President want to make IUPUI more like other major universities. In a March 26 appearance before a school of journalism class in news-writing, they told how they intend to do so, if elected.

Voting in the elections continues through Tuesday, April 3.

The candidates — Stephen J. Akard, 19, sophomore in economics, and Gary C. Messplay, also 19, sophomore in political science — also detailed other elements in their platforms, stated their qualifications for the presidency and discussed the relative merits of their candidacies.

Akard platform

Akard said that, if elected, he will involve IUPUI alumni and local businesses in raising money for the school. Those efforts would ensure greater possibility of success in funding his "visions for the future of IUPUI."

"In the past," Akard said, "we've had the attitude that we come up with an idea, approach the university with our proposal, ask them how much they will give us, they say 'None,' and we give up on the proposal." He would approach other sources before going to the university for funds.

Akard's proposals include a study for development of an IUPUI radio station, a yearbook and freshman registry, and published grade distributions and course requirements.

The radio station would provide "job training I think this university should be providing," Akard said.

Akard said a freshman registry, with addresses and telephone numbers of students who wish to publish them, would make it easier for students to contact each other. That is often difficult with IUPUI being a commuter campus, he said.

Published course information would list the percentage of students who passed a course, the number of students who took it, its size and the requirements.

Akard also proposes bringing "big-name entertainment" to IUPUI, improvements of the Cavanaugh Hall student lounge and the Instructional Media Services facility (the "language lab"), establishment of a book exchange and sale at the beginning of each semester and a "campus-wide career exposition" in cooperation with major local businesses.

Social Awareness Week begins amid controversy

By Dave Stafford

The fourth annual Social Awareness Week, sponsored by the IUPUI Progressive Student Union, will be held this week despite conditions imposed on funding for the activities by the Student Programs Advisory Committee.

SPAC made funding for Social Awareness Week contingent upon the incorporation of opposing viewpoints. A recent appeal to the Fee Fund Advisory Committee proved unsuccessful.

SPAC, which allocates Student Activity Fee monies for student organizations and activities, wrote a contract for the PSU's funding that reads, in part:

"SPAC recommends that it is in everyone's best interest to present both sides of any issue brought up during Social Awareness Week. Funding will be contingent upon incorporating these ideas into the future plans of Social Awareness Week."

The wording of the contract has been strongly opposed by PSU members, who claim that the condition placed on funding for their event is discriminatory in that it singles out the PSU.

Mike Wagoner, director of student activities, said the PSU is an exclusive, unique organization on the IUPUI campus, and any other group similar to the PSU would be subject to the same conditions, because funding is drawn from the Student Activity Fee, which all students are required to pay.

Student Activity Fee monies were allocated to The Indianapolis Federalist Society, which describes itself as an organization of conservative and libertarian law students, for the society's program titled, "An Ideological Alternative: A Conservative View of Legal Philosophy." Michael Cheerva, president of the society, said that no restrictions were placed upon the program's content and that the society was not required to present an opposing view.

The clause in the contract came as a result of the PSU's activities during the 1983 Social Awareness Week, Wagoner said.

"One year ago, the PSU printed posters for me to approve, and the posters included information about a march on Naval Avionics [an Indianapolis manufacturer of weapons-guidance systems and other equipment]."

"I made it clear that the posters had to include a note that the Student Activity Fee wasn't paying for this, and they did," Wagoner said.

"Several students who were employees of Naval Avionics protested, and we decided that if Social Awareness Week were to be funded, both sides of a controversial issue must be promoted."

PSU members signed the contract for 1984 funding under protest, said Victor E. Wallis, associate professor of political science and women's studies and faculty co-sponsor of the PSU.

"There is no final agreement but, while the PSU maintains its displeasure at the proposed wording, the Dean for Student Services [Golam Mannan] has indicated it may be possible to appeal the decision," Wallis said.

Still time to choose

There's still time to cast your vote in the IUPUI Student Body Elections. Polling times and places are listed in the advertisement on page 4 of this issue.

But most of you won't bother, if last year's turnout is any basis for prediction. Of some 23,000 students, only 405 voted for a presidential candidate in the 1983 elections. That's 3.5 percent.

The turnout was that low despite plenty of reasons for heightened interest. Campaigning and electioneering were especially vigorous, enough so to give rise to allegations of improprieties at the polls. The breakage of a ballot-box led to questions of tampering (which were later withdrawn). And the first poll showed a tie between presidential candidates George Graves and Vasilis Kouloulas.

In view of the complaints and questions, the Election Committee called for a second vote on all candidates, rather than the run-off presidential vote originally contemplated.

That's when the voters, their political passions wrought to fever pitch by all the controversy, stayed away from the polls in thousands.

Why do student elections attract so few voters?

Perhaps most students feel like the one who, when asked if he had voted, said, "No, man, I'm apolitical."

Wrong. We're all political, whether or not we participate in politics. (Aristotle called our species the "political animal.") Elected officials make decisions that affect all of us, whether or not we vote for them.

How many Marines are apolitical? How many voted for or against Ronald Reagan? How many died in Lebanon because he decided to send them there? The answer to the last question has nothing — and, at the same time, everything — to do with the answer to the first two.

As for elected officials of the IUPUI student government, are you happy with what they've done, or not done, this past year? If not, and you didn't vote, don't point a finger in blame unless you're standing in front of a mirror.

This year's presidential candidates have stated their intentions in some detail in the article on page 1. Please do yourself and all of us a favor: read the story, choose the candidate you think will do the best things for IUPUI, and vote.

Ethics on Campus

Scholarship for gay/lesbian medical practice

Good Work! Stanford University has established a scholarship fund for one of its medical students who shows a commitment to serving the gay community. The Gay and Lesbian Alliance on that campus presented university administrators with over $2,000 they had raised for the purpose. The recipient need not be gay nor lesbian, but must be willing to serve gays and lesbians in future practice.

Would that all medical persons were committed to such a practice! The irony is that the sacred Hippocratic oath does indeed bind those who take it to treat all persons indiscriminately, including, presumably, gays and lesbians. These persons are entitled to medical care from physicians, hospitals, clinics, nurses, etc., without prejudice nor reference to sexual orientation.

The neat thing about the Stanford scholarship is its focus on medical service specifically to the gay/lesbian world. If, for example, AIDS is a peculiarity of the physical behavior of gays, then such a focus is not only desirable but mandatory. There needs to be responsible, professional, compassionate and earnest attention to a disease that strikes at such a specifically denoted group — a disease that strikes with discrimination.

Now let's hope that some brave medical student will step forward and make the commitment — not simply to receive the scholarship but actually to serve the gay/lesbian community. Let's hope that application causes no grief, pain or embarrassment to the one who makes it. And let's also hope that similar campus organization and concerned persons, coast to coast, follow this lead.

When professional persons of all sorts — medical, legal, clergy, educators — are persuaded to commit themselves to work specifically for gay/lesbian rights, to fight against discrimination in all places, then society shall move closer to its noblest purposes: to be a family of people working together for the common good.

Wayne C. Olson is director of Metropolitan Indianapolis Campus Ministry at IUPUI.

To the Editor:

We, the Election Committee, would like to thank the students, faculty, and staff for their cooperation thus far in the IUPUI Student Body Elections.

The two articles and one editorial in the March 26 issue of the Sagamore reveal some very valid and some invalid points concerning the Election Committee and the election as a whole. Several of the statements and suggestions aimed toward the Election Committee and the elections show a degree of misinformation and lack of knowledge of the writers. Some of the ideas, such as candidates having their own representatives on the Election Committee, do not take into consideration factors which are very important such as a proven bias on the part of an E. C. member. Now a suggestion of a non-voting member of the E. C. being a candidate's choice could be a viable suggestion.

A further example is the issue of the E. C. not presenting all policy decisions before the full Student Assembly. Evidently, the fact that an "Emergency Meeting" of the SA has a 72 hour delay so that all the SA members can know about the meeting escaped notice. All decisions concerning the candidates and the election cannot be anticipated, and those decisions often need to be made far more quickly than 72 hours after the fact. If the SA was to make these decisions, the decisions could not be rendered as quickly and as efficiently. This example shows a lack of general understanding of the working procedures of the SA.

The point is that sweeping generalities oftentimes are not specific enough to ever work. The Election Committee as a whole would welcome changes in the mandates for the benefit of all involved in the coming year. At the present time, however, we must work with the guidelines we have, as promptly and as fairly as we can (which the candidates realize).

Thank you for allowing us the forum for this response and for the fairness with which the election has been covered by the Sagamore up to and including the last issue.

Registration problems in people, not system

To the Editor:

As registration for summer is almost over and fall registration is just about to begin, many students are getting disgruntled and frustrated. The system is simple to understand if people would learn to read. The first couple of pages in the schedule explain how the procedure works.

There is no excuse for students' arriving at the registration site without the proper signatures, authorizations, etc.

I get sick and tired of people saying our new system does not work properly. People are not using the system properly is the problem nine out of ten times. Once classes are closed there is no sense in getting angry at the people who register you. Each class can only hold so many students.

If you receive a problem report, correcting the mistake usually takes no time at all, if you are patient. Often the student does not color the dots in properly and an incorrect schedule results. Please check your schedule to be sure you have the correct times and days. The computer does not automatically check to be sure there are no time conflicts. That is the student's responsibility.

We cannot continue to hold students' hands throughout their journey in college. If you cannot handle registration I wonder if you should be in school at all.

Our system is not perfect, I will grant, but the majority of the problems are caused by the students themselves.

More About

Candidates

The candidate said he opposes increases of the $2.50 Student Activity Fee, which students pay at registration each semester. The Student Activity Fee Study Committee has received proposals that recommend raising it.

Messplay platform

Messplay said his "first and biggest program for next year," if he is elected, will be establishment of a book co-op to be run by the Student Assembly. Students would leave their books with the assembly for sale on consignment.

Messplay also said he will work to bring more fraternities and sororities to the university. A survey conducted last year indicated that students favor having more of them, he said.

Greek societies would help to unify the campus, Messplay said. "IUPUI as it exists now is like a group of 25,000 individuals, and there's no sense of cohesiveness or solidarity in the campus at all that I sense." Fraternities and sororities would be "a fundamental way to reach this solidarity," he said.

Messplay's other proposals are for faculty course evaluations, a bus line connecting the Michigan Street Campus and the Park Lafayette apartments — which the university owns and rents to students — and more typewriters for students' use.

The candidate emphasized that the proposes evaluation of courses, not instructors. "A lot of times you'll look through the bulletin and select a class, and you'll get to the class and find out it has nothing to do with what was in the bulletin at all. We've had several students complain of this."

Qualifications

Akard said, "I believe IUPUI is an up-and-coming — if not already arrived — major university in not only this state but in this country. And I believe I can provide positive leadership for the student body of this campus."

Messplay said, "I worked closely with the current president, George Graves, this year, and his administration. I favor from this, I believe, because I was able to see the mistakes that George made."

"It was not beneficial because of the mistakes but because I was able to learn from the mistakes that George made and I believe every incoming administration makes. So perhaps that will give me somewhat of an advantage at the beginning of the year." Messplay also cited his work on several university and Student Assembly committees.

Relative merits

Asked why voters should choose him over his opponent, Akard said, "I think I can be more innovative, more active and devote as much time as possible to this campus, because I believe in this campus and communication is primarily what it's all about in a position like this. In that role [as president] I believe I can be a more effective leader of this campus."

To the same question Messplay responded, "I feel like I can bring a good sense of student government, something that students can look upon favorably rather than [asking], 'What does student government even do?'"

"You can probably ask anybody to name six things the Student Assembly does, and probably not too many of them can come up with all six. It's too bad that so much money goes into the student government — a percentage of their Student Activity Fee money — yet they can see no direct results. And that's one thing I can do."

Child welfare specialist honored by organization

by Janice R. Odle

The month of March was designated as "Social Work Month" and special recognition was given to an outstanding social worker and public citizen in each region of the state.

Marion Wagner, Scott Severns and Kathy Welling were this year's Region 6 of the Indiana Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers award recipients at the monthly social work breakfast program, "Update 1984: National/Political Human Services" held at the IU Student Union Building on March 9th.

Wagner, recipient of the Social Worker of the Year award, is a visiting professor of social work at IU School of Social Work at IUPUI and a child welfare specialist.

She is also known for her advocacy on women's issues and rights which has taken her to Washington, D.C., to work for the National Organization for Women as senior political staffer.

"I always have tried to combine the interpersonal as well as the community organizational areas because I think social work as a profession should address both the individual and interpersonal as well as social needs.

"It is my impression that because 1984 is such an important year politically, Indianapolis region selected me as an example of the many social workers who are involved in political activities," said Wagner.

Severns and Welling, of the Legal Services Organization, shared the Public Citizen of the Year award which honors someone who although not a social worker, has a profound understanding of social work and a personal commitment to supporting its aims and ideals.

Keynote speaker Robert P. Stewart, president of the National Association of Social Workers, expressed his admiration and respect for the Indiana Chapter and told award recipients and program attendees, "Everyone wants to be heard, but one voice should be heard above all others. It is the voice of the children of our land. They most clearly tell us what kind of society we are creating and what we need to change. Listen to the children."

Offices moved for better service

by Mark J. Goff

Better service to students and better communications between offices are the greatest advantages in relocating the Office of Scholarships and Financial Aids and the Bursar's office, according to Robert E. Martin, university bursar.

Both employees and students are reacting favorably to the move, according to Martin, who cites "close proximity to the other student services of financial aid, admissions, and registration" as the greatest benefit to the relocation of his office from the University Services building to the first floor of Cavanaugh Hall.

Martin said no unique problems were encountered during the move, other than those associated with any other type of moving, but he anticipates potential problems arising during fall registration.

"Summer Session registration began March 21," Martin said, "and so far everything seems to be running smoothly, but from the standpoint of space, we may encounter some problems during fall registration when a larger volume of students come in to register during Walk-In or Final Registration." The Office of Scholarships and Berkey Building is demolished.

George Carter/Sagamore

Financial Aid did not vacate its former facilities in the Berkeley Building until 2 p.m. March 21, and consequently was required to do some tricky maneuvering in order to keep their services to students going, according to Shirley M. Boardman, office director.

"We were at a bit of a disadvantage in that we were trying to complete our move on the same day that Summer registration was beginning," Boardman said.

"The front desk area and reception area was moved late Tuesday evening to Cavanaugh Hall," Boardman said, "But our telephones and other materials had not yet been moved when the day began."

"For sometime we were operating from both locations," Boardman said, "until telephone services completed the installation of our new phones."

The new space equals that at the old location, Boardman said, "but there are benefits to being located so closely to the other offices, in that it's much easier to communicate with them if the need should arise."

"We will miss the Berkeley Building in the respect that it gave our office an intimate sort of relationship being in our own building," Boardman said, "but I will be glad to give up the job of supervising that building, so I can dedicate all my energies to serving the students."

Rockwell debut comparable to Michael Jackson, Prince

Rockwell
Somebody's Watching Me
Motown Records

Just who is Rockwell? Many people have asked that question after hearing the current single, "Somebody's Watching Me," climb up the pop, soul, and dance charts. The song features the unmistakable vocals of Michael Jackson. There were a lot of people who thought it was another Michael Jackson song and he was only recording under another name.

After listening to this album I'm no closer to knowing who this person is or even whether or not it really is only one person, since it sounds like different vocalists on several songs.

One thing I am sure of is that this isn't just another young funk virtuoso simply laying down the grooves. Soul artists from Jackson to Prince have been changing the way they record music. It's not enough just motivate the posterior; you shake your booty and still have something important to say.

Rockwell seems to have this attitude on the first side of this debut album. The title cut recalls the paranoia of Michael Jackson's "Wanna Be Starting Something." While the latter song threatens to jump off the turntable with its wild anger and frantic disco beat, Rockwell opts for a more sedate, but equally compelling approach to alienation in the modern world.

"Is the mailman watching me?" he queries in a falsetto nearing hysteria. Rockwell completes the picture by conjuring up images of Hitchcock's Psycho and further adds to the mood with some chilling organ touches.

"Obscene Phone Caller" transforms a seemingly trivial problem into another perceptive comment on alienation. The person plagued in this song appears to resent the persistence of this "dirty little nasty twit" and yet the very fact that the victim is even bothering to make a song about obscene phone callers reveals the disturbing loneliness that both participants feel in this deviant yet nevertheless social interaction.

"If you'd just tell me if you were a girl or something, I'd talk to you, you know" may seem like a throw-away line until you realize how important these calls have come to mean to both of them.

The next song is a terrific cover of George Harrison's "Taxman," which never sounded as good even when the Beatles first performed it. "And you're working for no one but me," someone growls over the persistent beat, realizing the sinister side of the song while retaining its humor with shimmering Beatlesque harmonies.

Side one concludes with a simple statement of optimism recalling the old Earth Wind and Fire. "You've got to change your ways," Rockwell concludes after looking at the world with a cold eye. Descending minor chords anchor the message in the chorus and a irresistible synthesizer bass gives this idealism some needed weight.

Rockwell: More than a Michael Jackson look-alike

If only side two were as effective as side one this album would be a very effective piece of progressive funk. However, "Runaway" and "Wasting Away" reduce Rockwell's uncomplex but cogent observations into triteness.

"Knife" is an inexcusable reworking of "She's Out of My Life" from Michael Jackson's "Off the Wall."

"Foreign Country" resumes the focus of side one by using an American in Russia as a metaphor for daily anxiety: "Please behave in foreign country/Detents may depend on you!"

Rockwell shows incredible promise with this debut album and except for a few missteps is actually one up on his mentor Michael Jackson, at least in terms of seriousness. I mean, how significant was "The Girl is Mine" anyway?

Rockwell certainly has the potential of making important music. Let's just hope Quincy Jones doesn't get a hold of him.

Disney's 'adult' film safe bet for box office

Splash

Directed by Ron Howard
Starring Tom Hanks, Daryl Hannah,
Eugene Levy, and John Candy
Touchstone Films

Walt Disney Studios are again trying to change their image, this time by creating an entire different studio that will produce more "adult" but still high quality films. The first offering of the newly formed Touchstone Films is a fairly safe bet for the box office: a comedy.

The studio has failed to make a profit on any of its recent new releases.

Tron was perhaps their biggest disappointment since it had cost so much to make. Lack of advertising support contributed to Tron's poor showing despite the fact that it was an entertaining, light-hearted cinematic interpretation of the video game craze.

Tex starring teen idol Matt Dillon, was a less obvious attempt to cash in current trends; however, the film was too often plagued by sappy moralizing despite the convincing performances of its actors and a fairly authentic script.

Splash continues with the expected Disney reliance on gimmicks in this unlikely story of a produce salesman's love affair with, yes, a mermaid! There's not really much a plot here except the mermaid (Daryl Hannah) has only six days to spend with her chosen non-aquatic lover, Allen Bower (Tom Hanks).

The film depicts Hannah's awkward attempts to adjust to New York life: her discovery of Bloomingdale's and Richard Simmons; her acquisition of the English language through watching six hours of T.V. and the rather bizarre manner in which she eats lobster.

Most of the scenes are whimsical and effective comedy bits and honestly contain a few great lines.

For instance, after watching game shows and soap operas all day, Madison (That's what Hanks names the mermaid after she says she likes the name of the street) is anxious to talk to Hanks so she can ask him all sorts of questions about himself so he can "win hundreds of fabulous prizes and maybe even the grand prize which is . . ." Well, you get the idea.

Most of the fun and the sentiment has already been enacted by now but the chase scenes are fast-paced and unintrusive nonetheless. Most of what makes this movie work is the relationship between Hanks and Hannah. John Candy's small role is often an excuse for gratuitous lewd remarks and prove little except that Disney is willing to have its actors curse in order to prove that the film is more "grown up."

Splash doesn't contain the breathtaking innovation that Tron did, but it does capture the sincerity of Tex and it proves more than anything else that Disney, using Touchstone Films, is again able to produce a solid, likeable, and most importantly for them, saleable movie.
