In Case You Haven't Heard Dept.
THE NATATORIUM IS COMING

A $17-million physical education complex, including a 5,400-seat natatorium expected to attract national and international swimming competitions, will be built at IUPUI. After months of preliminary planning and approvals, the I.U. board of trustees at this month's meeting gave the nod to begin work on the complex at the corner of Blake and West New York streets. They awarded a contract for $329,400 to Gradex Inc. of Indianapolis to begin work this week on excavation and other site preparation. The trustees also approved $39,000 contract to Berkel Co. of Bonner Springs, Kansas, for pilings and general foundation work.

Funding for the multimillion-dollar project will come from I.U., $7-million (funded for the School of Physical Education by the Indiana General Assembly), plus an $8-million gift from Lilly Endowment, Inc., and a $2-million gift from the Krannert Charitable Trust.

"We are proud of our growth here at IUPUI," said Glenn W. Irwin, Jr., I.U. vice president, "and we are pleased that we can offer to the city, even the nation, an aquatic center that will attract competitors to Indianapolis and this campus. The center, combined with the new home of the I.U. School of Physical Education, will offer exciting opportunities to the university community, as well as to the community at large."

The complex, divided into deck, concourse and bridge levels, will encompass approximately 200,00 gross square feet, about 68,000 of which was included in the original plan for the I.U. School of Physical Education (now headquartered on leased land at 1010 West 64th Street). The physical education school is part of the Education-Social Work Building currently under construction on the north side of New York Street. The two sections eventually will be connected by an overhead pedestrian walkway.

The combined physical education-natatorium building will be 500 feet by 190 feet and the natatorium will comprise about two-thirds of the length. Height, from pool deck level to the ceiling, will be 90 feet.

The deck level of the natatorium section will feature a 75-foot by 55-foot diving pool with two 3-meter springboards, two 1-meter springboards, a 10-meter diving platform with 3, 5, 7 ½ and 10-meter levels. Also on the deck level will be a 50-meter competition pool with eight racing lanes.

The deck level of the physical education section will consist of a 50-meter pool with six racing lanes. The pool will be used for physical education classes and as a warm-up facility for competitors using the natatorium. A section of the floor of the pool may be raised or lowered to adjust water depth to accommodate handicapped students and aid in instruction.

The concourse level of the natatorium section will include seats for nearly 4,600 spectators and include a small cafe. (Also, bleachers for 800 competitors may be erected on the deck level.) At the south end, 7,000 to 8,000 square feet of office space will be constructed above and below the concourse level.

The concourse level of the physical education section will include gymnasiums and two handball courts. The main gym will feature one competitive court with pullout bleachers for 1,800 spectators or three practice courts.

The bridge level of the physical education section will house administrative faculty offices, plus a small library. It is from this level that an enclosed overhead pedestrian walkway will connect the building with the Education-Social Work Building.

Current plans are for the complex to be ready for use in June, 1982. Architects are the Indianapolis firm of Browning, Day, Pollack Associates and Edward L. Barnes, New York City. Construction manager is the Tousley-Bixler Construction Co., Inc. of Indianapolis.

In other action, the trustees approved the firm of Browning, Day, Pollack Associates to proceed with preliminary planning for the 28.7-acre recreational activity area along New York Street. The project, which runs from the bridge to near Agnes Street, is expected to include a track, outdoor basketball courts and fields for baseball, softball, touch football and soccer.

In personnel actions, Dr. Henry R. Besch Jr., chairman of pharmacology, was named Showalter professor of pharmacology; Scott E. Evenbeck was approved as associate director of administrative affairs and associate professor of psychology, and Carol Nathan was named assistant dean of the faculties.
