Meet two Herron School of Art and Design students, Sarah Herbert and Kaitlyn Robison, who are among IUPUI's 2013 Top 100 Students. Sarah and Kaitlyn embody what it means to be among IUPUI's best students—scholastic achievement, involvement in projects outside of school, and community service.

And on a campus of 30,000 students, being in the Top 100 is a big deal! The Top 100 students were selected out of 1,078 nominees.

Both Sarah and Kaitlyn are following their passions by studying design at Herron, and both are Honors College Scholars, which means their grades are spectacular.

Sarah Herbert

Sarah grew up in the southeastern Indiana town of Greensburg. "Greensburg is a small, rural community, and it's actually quite a wonder that I found myself at Herron studying Visual Communication Design. I'm currently a junior at Herron and I am so happy that I've had to opportunity to study at such a great school. "

In Indianapolis, Sarah puts her design skills to work at a business called SmallBox in Broad Ripple. She also helps others by volunteering at Riley Hospital, Keep Indianapolis Beautiful, and Second Helpings. "Go out into the community and volunteer, take part in events or simply talk to people, "

Sarah says. "It's amazing to hear all the stories people have, all the experiences they've undergone, and all the knowledge they've gained from those same experiences."

Kaitlyn, from Elkhart, Indiana, is excited to be a web designer. She works hard not just in classes, but also outside of school. Her advice to Junior Jaguars: "Explore several of your interests. I would recommend getting involved in activities and clubs at school and in the community in order to become more well-rounded. This will also help you find the areas you are most passionate about and which to further pursue."

Sarah agrees. "If you love something, why not make it what you plan to do for a living?" Try new things, follow your passion and work hard...and most importantly, have fun!
