DELAY AT RILEY

Until recently, it was hoped that the new facilities for patients at Riley Hospital would be phased into operation on July 1. However, because of plumbing facilities that haven't been completed due to a plumbers union strike over which the University has no control, the tentative dates for the occupation of patient care areas have been changed, the earliest being Admitting Rooms on July 28 and the latest being Ward K (Adolescents) on October 1.

POLICEMEN ON CAMPUS

About 160 police officers from 51 Indiana counties attended the Chemical Tests for Intoxication School at the School of Medicine to train operators of equipment to determine breath alcohol concentration. The special school for city, county, and state officers is sponsored by the State Department of Toxicology at the School of Medicine and is directed by Dr. Robert B. Forney, director of the department.

The three week-long classes, which ended Friday, covered instruction in the metric system, the physiology of alcohol, the effects of various levels of body alcohol and legal aspects in the use of breath to determine body alcohol.

Most of the week was spent learning how to use the Drunkometer and Breathalyzer machines. The Drunkometer (invented by Dr. Rolla H. Harger, professor emeritus of pharmacology) and the Breathalyzer (invented by Professor Robert F. Borkenstein, chairman of the Department of Police Administration, I.U. at Bloomington) measures the amount of alcohol in exhaled breath.

About 850 police officers in Indiana are certified to run the intoxication tests on the 206 machines in police barracks throughout the state. But many more certified officers are needed, despite the fact that the I.U. school expands each year. More officers are necessary because the arresting officer cannot, according to Indiana law, run the test himself even though he may be certified.
