welcome to Louisville

A silhouette of patriotism is the backdrop for National FFA Talent participants.

An astounding number of blue and gold jackets could be seen making their way through the grounds of the Kentucky Fair & Exposition Center during the course of the convention.

Billboards said it, hotel marquis posted it, restaurant centerpieces had it and Louisvillians said it, "Welcome to Louisville," they all echoed. "Welcome FFA!" During the week, as the 72nd National FFA Convention kicked off for the first time in Louisville, attendees looked for ways to make their unique mark on the FFA—their own signature of success.

The convention proved that a geographical change did not affect the excitement and enthusiasm carried by FFA members.

To maintain a quality experience for members, teachers and guests, the National FFA Organization made a historical decision to move the national FFA convention from Kansas City to Louisville, after 71 years. The convention proved that a geographical change did not affect the excitement and enthusiasm carried by FFA members. The 46,918 convention attendees helped rewrite history in Louisville. An astounding number of members dressed in their official blue and gold jackets could be seen making their way through the grounds of the Kentucky Fair and Exposition Center for the first time.

Signature of Success

All but three career development events were held onsite, headliner musical concerts raised the roof in Broadbent Arena, convention sessions in Freedom Hall housed almost 17,000, the career show boasted 349 exhibitors (the largest ever) and the FFA shopping mall doubled in size! Every square foot of the Kentucky fairgrounds met an FFA member; students sent electronic postcards from computer stations, listened to rivoting convention speakers, played frisbee on the front lawn and chowed down on culinary delights.

The festivities began on Wednesday evening with "FFA-Lighting Up Louisville." A spectacular fireworks display lit the Kentucky night sky just outside of the convention fairgrounds to kickoff an exciting week of competition, friendship and education. Members carried this energy with them throughout the week. They applied their industry knowledge by competing in career development events. Students interacted with business representatives and expanded their career horizons at the national agricultural career show. Louisville tour sites, like Churchill Downs and Papa John's, experienced the impact as most set record attendance numbers.

The convention hall will come to order! In a united effort, the national officers and staff call to order another year of unforgettable memories.

The national officer team helped debut the John Deere Winston Cup NASCAR race car and the driver, Chad Little. The car was on display throughout the week of convention.

Signature of Success

The school bus is on the road again! This trip takes passengers to the new, exciting destination of Louisville, Kentucky, location of the 72nd National FFA Convention.

Vans, busses, cars and planes full of wide-eyed members and guests pulled into the Kentucky fairgrounds not knowing what to expect. But, Louisville hospitality volunteers stood ready to greet convention attendees. With maps in hand, students and advisors turned to these hospitality volunteers for advice, directions and guidance on the new city, new facilities, new restaurants and new activities in which to participate. Each volunteer hoped to make the transition to Louisville an easy one by providing useful information about local restaurants, hotels and educational tours.

As members ventured into the Kentucky Fair and Exposition Center for the first time, they experienced an overwhelming sense of pride. Some were attending the national FFA convention for the first time, while others were seasoned veterans, but a feeling of belonging enveloped students as they listened to motivational speakers and national officers. The spectacular laser shows added to the excitement of convention sessions. And, band, chorus and talent selections showcased the talents of FFA members across the nation.

Signature of Success

FFA members enjoyed documenting the first national convention held in Louisville.

National officers shared messages
of hope, overcoming mediocrity and reaching out to others in time
of need.

Through leadership workshops, FFA members learned to cultivate their own signature of success by setting goals and putting a plan of action in place. On the main arena stage, the spotlight shined on model chapters, 100% membership states, proficiency finalists, public speakers, degree candidates and others as they were recognized for strengthening their state, their chapter, their community and themselves.

Speakers provided students with motivation and inspiration to improve the quality of life for themselves and those around them. Emory Austin told students, "Rarity is where leadership of the premier kind, comes from." Acclaimed actor Danny Glover challenged FFA members to continue serving others for the benefit of the whole. Dave Roever left members teary-eyed and renewed after conveying his message of courage and hope for the future. National officers shared messages of hope, overcoming mediocrity and reaching out to others in times of need.

The largest-ever national agricultural career show gave members insight about opportunities in colleges, businesses and most of all, the FFA. Meanwhile, the FFA shopping mall allowed members and guests to take a part of Louisville and the national FFA convention home with them.

These students took time to relax and enjoy the warm weather on the front lawn.

Signature of Success

Beyond the convention sessions and activities, FFA members chose to make their mark on the Louisville community as well. More than 700 second-, third- and fourth-graders participated in a mentoring activity with FFA members. Youngsters learned about the vital role of agriculture and participated in team-building and personal growth activities. State officers from around the country educated students in Jefferson County classrooms about the important role of agriculture in everyone's lives. FFA's commitment to community also resulted in chapters from all 50 states pairing with local schools and Kentucky Harvest to help feed Louisville for a day by collecting 15 tons of donated food.

The national FFA convention theme, "FFA—Signature of Success," encouraged members to take the experiences and energy gained at the convention back to their local communities and instill a fresh perspective in their programs. While learning about the fundamentals of agriculture, members also learned about the fundamentals of life: hard work, business management, effective communication skills, teamwork, integrity and problem-solving.

In an age where the media deliver story after story of school shootings, this inaugural Louisville convention celebrated what's truly right with today's youth. FFA members ready and willing to give back to local communities. FFA members striving to make a positive difference in the lives of others. FFA members committed to maintaining and sustaining America's foundation—agriculture. FFA members left the convention inspired to return to their chapters with a new purpose—to better themselves and their communities with their own signature of success.

Money rains down on the arena in celebration of the $7.3 million raised for FFA and agricultural education programs and scholarships.

A desire to develop their career skills brought these FFA members to Louisville. They participated in the Meats Evaluation and Technology Career Development Event.

stars over america

With hearts racing, the eight finalists of the Stars Over America contest eagerly awaited the announcement of their names. They would soon know the outcome of one of the most prestigious awards in the FFA. The students had already gathered years of valuable work experience, gone through rigorous rounds of interviews and inspections of record books, as well as conducted filming visits to their businesses and farming operations.

As finalists were introduced on stage, they were awarded $1,000. The national winners received an additional $1,000. Parents of the finalists were each presented with the Honorary American FFA Degree to recognize their contributions to their children's success.

Stars Over America Film is sponsored by the Farm Service Agency, United States Department of Agriculture and the General Fund of the National FFA Foundation. Cash awards for the national finalists and winners are sponsored by the executive sponsors of the National FFA Foundation.

American Star Farmer Michael Springer and American Star in Agribusiness Jay Harris proudly display their hard-earned awards.

stars over america

Jay Harris, 22
Alexander, Illinois
Franklin FFA Chapter

Harris managed a herd of more than 2,100 hogs on land that his grandfather left him selling the property to finance his equipment sales operation. He currently sells equipment including combines and heads, used tractors and parts with sales stretching over 24 states and internationally. Aside from buying and selling equipment he designs, builds, tests and markets his own line of planters. He currently employs four part-time mechanics and a truck driver.

Michael Springer, 21
Independence, Kansas
Neodesha FFA Chapter

Over eleven years ago, Springer started a 15-calf bottle operation with the financial support of his parents. By 1995, his calf herd went from 15 to 99. That same year he moved into pork production, building a farrowing house and nursery and established a 36-sow herd. He purchased 230 acres and farm equipment to increase the value of his operation. In cooperation with his father and grandfather, he plans to expand the farm to 2,000 farrow-to-finish sows and 6,000 acres of cropland.

Astonishment, excitement and disbelief were written all over Michael Springer's face as he was named the American Star Farmer.

american star in agribusiness finalists

Kyle Bailey, 22
Middlesburg, Indiana
Fairfield FFA Chapter

At 14, Bailey was the youngest ever graduate of Kentucky Horseshoeing School. Following a two-year apprenticeship, he started building up his own clientele and today shoes more than 400 horses. He reads and studies current research reports, farrier publications and attends technical seminars. Bailey relies on modern technology, using video and computer equipment, to diagnose and treat equine lameness. A firm believer in community support, he regularly speaks to children's groups on the importance of proper shoeing.

Charles Hale, 20
Sterling, Oklahoma
Sterling FFA Chapter

Hale started with a small cow/calf operation and one riding lawn mower. During the next year, he financed a new tractor, loader, post driver, box blade and welder and began custom spraying. Hale is certified in Restricted Use Pesticide application and is a certified pipeline welder. Hale estimates spraying over 35,000 acres in 1999. Future aspirations include operating a full-service farm center or securing a position with a top chemical company.

Jeff Weber, 21
Pilot Point, Texas
Pilot Point FFA Chapter

Weber acquired a small loan as a freshman to purchase equipment to cut and bale hay to feed his own cattle herd. Seeing opportunity, he began contracting his services to farmers and now employs five people. In the future, Weber hopes to expand his business in custom and hay brokerage in North Central Texas.

Brad Baumgardt, 21
Sleepy Eye, Minnesota
Sleepy Eye FFA Chapter

As a freshman, Baumgardt rented 160 acres of land from his father producing corn and soybeans. He then increased the capacity of his land to 480 acres, expanded from crops to livestock and purchased a semi-trailer for hauling grain and livestock. In addition, he began finishing hogs, a business that has grown to finishing 1,000 head of hogs at a time. In the past year, he purchased 166 acres and became a partner with 40 percent ownership of Baumgardt Family Farms, Inc. His future plans involve expanding the family farm and marketing manure from his swine operation as fertilizer.

Justin Jordahl, 21
Alden, Iowa
Iowa Falls-Alden FFA Chapter

At 15, Jordahl secured some financial support from his grandmother and renovated an unoccupied hog barn at home. He then contracted pigs from a local farmer and began finishing the hogs. His expansion continued with the construction of four 1,200-head confinement hog units. Jordahl, has learned the importance of maintaining the health of his animals and the efficiency of his buildings, saving him money and enabling him to capitalize on his investments. His future plans include operating a farrow-to-finish hog enterprise and farming 1,600 acres of land.

Erika Kenner, 21
Leeds, North Dakota
Leeds FFA Chapter

Kenner purchased her first heifer in fifth grade with a loan from her grandfather. From that first heifer she expanded to a herd of heifers, purchased her first Morgan horse which she trained for show and diversified her operation to a variety of crops. Her crops include durum, wheat, canola, sunflowers and flax. She has also experimented with embryo transfer to increase the quality of her herd and started advertising her cattle to familiarize herself with the promotion side of the industry.

national officer candidates

A total of 36 candidates competed for the six national officer spots for 1999-2000. These candidates displayed their outstanding talents, abilities and knowledge through oral and written interviews and exams.

Becoming a national FFA officer is a dream for thousands of FFA members. Only six outstanding members are chosen each year. Thirty-six candidates earned their American FFA Degree and were chosen as their states' one candidate for a national office. Convention week kept the candidates active with a written exam, a writing exercise and six interview rounds with the nominating committee, which chooses the six national officers.

The suspense ended Saturday afternoon when the national officer nominating committee submitted their report to the convention session. The convention floor erupted with enthusiasm as, one by one, the names of the new officers were announced.

The team will spend the next year, visiting each state as well as Japan. We praise these members for serving their state organizations and congratulate them on a job well done.

agri-entrepreneurship awards

Students with self-motivation, determination and business savvy were honored at the entrepreneurship awards. Sponsored by and in partnership with the Kauffman Center for Entrepreneurial Leadership at the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation as a special project of the National FFA Foundation. Sponsored by and in partnership with the Kauffman Center for Entrepreneurial Leadership at the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation.

Self-initiative, determination and dedication are inherent qualities visibly recognized in the nine FFA members receiving an Agri-Entrepreneurship Award. As entrepreneurs, these nine finalists have successfully laid the groundwork and set a precedent for fellow members through personal commitment of starting their own enterprise. For their accomplishments, the finalists were awarded at the fifth convention session.

Dr. Robert Strom of the Kauffman Center for Entrepreneurial Leadership presented each winner with a plaque and a check for $1,000. In addition, each advisor received a check for $500 with which to promote entrepreneurship in their chapters. The Agri-Entrepreneurship Education Program is a joint activity of the National FFA Organization, the U.S. Department of Education and the National FFA Foundation.

Joseph Bachman of Metamora, IL, owns Bachman's Craft Making, a business in which he produces and markets five wood crafts including a birdhouse bench, a flat bench, wheelbarrow planters, butterfly houses and birdhouses. He started his business by selling to friends and neighbors. He then expanded into flea markets and craft shows and now his work is consigned to craft shows that sell his product for a commission.

Chris Blaser of Green Bay, WI, owns a market gardening company that produces vegetables, fruits and syrup throughout the summer months for sale at markets in the Green Bay area. He plans to increase his business by expanding to market outlets and potentially selling at farmers' markets five days a week if an ample supply of product is available.

Cecilia Carreño of Lompoc, CA, owns Cecilia's Flowers, a business she started her freshman year due to an interest in floral crops. She began by purchasing poinsettias, caring for and selling the poinsettias to school employees at Christmas. Her business has since expanded with knowledge of advertising, packaging and delivery as well as adding corsages, bouquets and arrangements to her product line.

Adam Hahn of Cambria, WI, owns Hahn's Hay Service, which provides quality grass and alfalfa hay for local area horse owners. He realized the potential for this business with the increasing number of ranchettes and the local Amish community. His customer base has expanded to include the Chicago Zoo, the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, the Green Lake County Highway Department and others due to his marketing strategies utilizing business cards, conventional ads and the Internet.

Tracy Hanger of Chandler, AZ, is the sole proprietor of Sequoia Crop Consulting providing field scouting services to growers. Services include crop maturation, laboratory analysis, insect pest management, biological control of pest and defoliation. Hanger developed an extensive business and marketing plan that outlines her goals for the company over the next five years. Hanger's major selling point that sets her aside from other crop consulting businesses is biological control.

Larrie Faulkner of Judith Gap, MT, began a partnership during his freshman year that created the Montana Worm Farm by raising his own night crawlers for fishing. He has since expanded to raising worms to break down compost as a source of fertilizers. With a grant from the Alternative Resources Energy Organization he has been able to purchase red wigglers for composting, offer household and yard waste collection and solid and liquid organic fertilizers.

Dustin Murphy of Opelika, AL, owns a business that supplies utility trailers to the local community and surrounding areas. His business has grown from 11 trailers due to a reasonable price, a large sales volume and advertising in farm bulletins. He keeps detailed records, prices and other pertinent information on each trailer, inspects all trailers for safety and has found it more economical to buy trailers in a large quantity to be successful.

David Schroeder of West Point, NE, is planning the start of his own business: A'la Heart Meals to Go, to offer low cholesterol, sodium and sugar a la carte entrees to people with special needs throughout the community. Through research, he concluded that quick, healthy meals are not available in his community, motivating him to test and modify recipes. The meals will be prepared on a pre-ordered basis and delivered to the client.

Ryan Sweeney of Mason, MI, founded RPS Enterprises, a fabrication company specializing in building livestock equipment. He began in 1997 building blocking chutes, and now builds sheep stands, displays for show cattle, calving gates and custom handling facilities and hog gates. He attends trade shows to increase sales and has learned about marketing products, creating budgets and keeping accurate financial records.

Deanna Thies of Glasgow, MO, owns The Veggie Patch, a fruit and vegetable business that includes several specialty varieties of squash, tomatoes and okra, catering to her target market, the local Asian community. She markets her product at one of two local farmer markets five days a week, advertises in a local magazine and on a local radio station. She has expanded into cut flowers, perennial plant production, pumpkins and gourds.

prepared

public speaking

Prepared public speaking national winner, Elio Chiarelli, Jr. of the HG Parkinson FFA Chapter in Pennsylvania, impressed audiences with knowledge in his speech entitled, "Is Anything Safe to Eat?"

A national finalist in prepared public speaking is not the only person that can recite his or her speech word for word. Mom, dad, agricultural instructor, the family dog and a brother or sister heard that speech so many times they could recite it together as a chorus.

The time and commitment of the speaker can start up to a year prior to nationals, a path beginning at the local level, continuing through to district, state and then the final destination, national convention. The journey is long, but the benefits and knowledge acquired are plentiful.

The finalists dedicated countless hours of research, practice and constructive criticism to writing and learning a six to eight minute speech about an agriculturally related topic. After speaking, each finalist entertained a five-minute question and answer period with the judges.

Sponsored by FMC Corporation, Agricultural Products Group.

is anything safe to eat?

National Prepared Public Speaking Winner: Elio Chiarelli, Jr., Pennsylvania

Picture this. It is a Sunday night, and you and your family decide to go out for an evening meal. A new all-you-can-eat buffet restaurant recently opened a few miles away. Just like the hundreds of other people in your community, you decide to test the new cuisine. Upon your arrival, you are seated by fast, courteous servers. As you look around the restaurant, you notice the clean and sanitary environment, which is expected from a new establishment. After your drinks are served, you are asked to help yourself to the buffet.

Hungry, you and your family pick up a plate and decide to begin with a salad, but there are a few problems. As you reach for the lettuce, you cannot help but think of last night's shocking news report about the amount of pesticide residue found within a head of lettuce. As your stomach turns, you move ahead. You are now at the condiments section of the salad line and notice those nutritious alfalfa sprouts that everyone says are so good for you. However, before you indulge in a plate full of seed sprouts, you remember that more than twenty thousand people in North America alone contracted salmonella from eating contaminated alfalfa sprouts. Finally, you forget about the salad section and move on to the "real" food. The main dishes for this evening's buffet all contain meat. That's fine, right? Except for a few problems that come to mind, such as a ground beef recall in the state of Washington, the listeria found in Oscar Mayer meats, or the discovery that stated one out of every three chickens contains salmonella. When all is said and done, you look down at your empty plate and begin to ask yourself, "Is anything safe to eat?"

A task force of the Council for Agriculture Science Technology, a private organization of food science groups, estimates that each year 6.5 to 33 million cases of food-borne illness occur in the United States and 9,000 people die. While many reported cases from food prepared by commercial or institutional establishments, sporadic cases and small outbreaks in homes are considered far more common. If we increase the awareness of food safety in the food industry and then inform consumers about how to handle food safely, the risk can be greatly reduced. We as a society, must realize that food can make you sick, but it is nothing to fear if you simply know the facts!

What the public should understand is that food safety does not rely on the producers and inspectors alone. The consumers themselves have one of the largest roles in the food safety circle. An area that must be placed under scrutiny is your own kitchen. For example, what comes to mind when you think of a clean kitchen? Shiny polished floors? Spotless stainless steel sinks? Gleaming counters and neatly arranged cupboards? Yes, that all helps, but I am speaking of the truly clean kitchens, one that relies on more than just looks; it also depends on safe food practices. Right now, there may be an invisible enemy ready to strike in your home. That enemy is called bacteria and it can be very harmful or even deadly. Even though consumers cannot see, smell or taste this bacteria, millions of strands can be invading food products, kitchen surfaces, knives and other utensils. Fortunately, consumers have the power to fight bacteria and keep foods safe. A few of the recommended ways to ensure safe food include:

1. Refrigerate or freeze food at or below 40 degrees,
2. Keep raw meat and poultry

- separate from other foods,
3. Wash working surfaces and hands after touching any food products,
4. Cook foods thoroughly to an internal temperature of at least 140 degrees, and
5. Keep hot foods hot and refrigerate leftovers immediately or discard.

In a perfect food safety world, none of the problems that I have mentioned would exist, but the possibility of this happening is remote. In fact, the Council for Agricultural Science and Technology said, "The zero risk of microbiological hazards is not possible and no one method will eliminate all pathogens or toxins from the food chain." Further, the council's report stresses what food safety and public health officials have already recognized, that everyone in the food system, from producers to people who prepared the products, must be observant in controlling food hazards. A problem occurs when consumers do not always take the time to wash hands and utensils or thaw meat properly. Emerging pathogens are demanding greater food safety vigilance than was required in previous generations. To expand the problem, the food safety supply has even become global, with many different countries supplying food products to the United States. We can all relate to more food being prepared and consumed away from home. The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates that consumers spend 43 cents of every food dollar eating out. In addition, an increasing amount of food prepared away from the home is then packaged for later consumption, thus creating new opportunities for mishandling. Finally, adding to the challenge, microorganisms continue to adapt and evolve, often increasing their degree of resistance.

We must accept it: American consumers are becoming more concerned about their food and its safety. In fact, food safety has surpassed crime prevention, health and nutrition, environmental protection, water quality, and recycling as the most important public issue. Fortunately, many organizations ensure the products we consume each day are not only safe but also healthy. Many agencies have over a 90-year history of protecting the public from unwholesome and unsafe food so that you and your families' safety will be ensured. So, the next time you decide to visit the new restaurant a few miles away, purchase groceries at the nearby supermarket, or simply open your own refrigerator, you should never be asking yourself, "Is anything safe to eat?"

The ability to think quickly on their feet, attain a wealth of knowledge on various agriculturally related topics and remarkable speaking skills, are prime characteristics for the extemporaneous public speaking participants.

This year's finalists possessed all of these traits and traveled far to compete here in Louisville for the national title. Each contestant was given 30 minutes to prepare a four to six minute speech on a randomly drawn agriculture topic.

National Extemporaneous Public Speaking Winner: Robyn Sites, Oklahoma

Sponsored by American Farm Bureau Federation

Robyn Sites of Oklahoma pleased the audience with her quick thinking and oration abilities as she walked away with the title of national extemporaneous public speaking winner.

extemporaneous public speaking

The topic that I have chosen today is the effect of labeling foods concerning GMO's and points of origin. In his speeches and on his web site, the Prince of Wales declares he would never eat the stuff and would not allow it to be grown on his land. Former Beatle Paul McCartney, when he learned that traces of it could be found in his late wife Lynda's vegetarian food line, reacted with the same fear and revulsion, as do most Britons. He ordered that the offending ingredient be removed immediately.

British tabloids now provide an advice column on how to avoid feeding the stuff to your pets. And, vandalism often occurs in the fields where it is grown. Indeed, not only in Britain, but throughout Europe, widespread resistance has occurred to any imported food—an action that could provoke a major trade war with the United States.

However, if you live on this side of the pond, you may be dimly aware of what the British tabloids refer to as "Franken-food" or genetically modified organisms. And, chances are, that even you today may have had some for breakfast or have some for lunch, and definitely will have some for dinner. A major revolution has occurred in the American food supply. For many years, due to technology, we have been able to cross trace from plants to make them higher quality and provide more food value. However, due to gene splicing, we are now able to take a gene from one organism and place it into another.

Therefore, a gene from a cat could be placed into a dog, or a gene from a sole bacterium could be placed into a tomato. The first genetically modified crop, introduced by Monsanto, was the Flavor Saver Tomato. It hit store shelves almost five years ago today. In 1998, 25 percent of corn, 38 percent of soybeans and 45 percent of cotton in the United States was genetically modified. Everything from soft drinks to the cereal you eat for breakfast contains corn or soybeans that are genetically modified organisms.

Monsanto, who is the leader of genetically modified organisms, or GMO's, says we are headed into a green revolution. Already, GMO's have reduced the cost of production for our farmers and improved our yields. Farmers no longer have to worry about as much pesticides and herbicides, because these plants already contain the nutrients enabled to avoid applying more pesticides.

However, widespread criticism has occurred in the United States and throughout the European Union, ranging from human health, environmental issues, trade sanctions and whether genetically modified organisms should be labeled also with their point of origin. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, the U.S. will begin long-term studies of genetically modified organisms, because the European Union has now passed a de facto moratorium on all imported GMO crops.

Just as we remember the touching stories in the early 1990's of a family having to leave their home because the industry where they worked was being shut down. The cotton industry was being reduced in the United States because of consumers buying clothes from other countries. "The touch, the feel of cotton" spurred the United States to support their nation. We are hoping the same thing will happen when we begin to label genetically modified organisms.

The United States has always been more up-to-date on the technology, because they believe that the United States Department of Agriculture, the Food and Drug Administration, have the right technology in order to look at these crops and determine if they are affecting our environment and are healthy for human consumption. The European Union has a more resistant side, because they have just faced the "mad cow" disease and lysteria.

The number one rule in agriculture is, "The consumer is always right." The second rule is, if you don't believe the first rule, you'd better look again. The consumer determines what is being used. Genetically modified organisms must be looked at and determined if they are safe for human consumption. I believe this issue should be met with not only open arms but, with at least, an open mind. Thank you.

Sponsored by Monsanto and the National FFA Foundation General Fund

Shaundra Schaff, of Absarokee, Montana, was honored as national winner in the FFA Agriscience Student Recognition Program. Schaff's project was entitled "Biological Control of Euphorbia esula a Noxious Weed." The purpose of Schaff's study was to investigate biological controls of leafy spurge and the various delivery systems to administer the control.

Schaff received $5,000 in cash scholarships and a plaque for her achievements. Schaff is a member of the Absarokee FFA Chapter and is advised by Tim Zumbrun.

This year's national runner-up was Paul Wichmann of Dent, Minnesota. His project involved analyzing methods of soil aeration on golf courses to relieve soil compaction and bulk density while increasing water infiltration and encouraging root development. Wichmann received $3,000 in cash scholarships and a plaque. Wichmann is a member of the Pelican Rapids FFA Chapter and is advised by Bill Januszewski.

Runner-up, Paul Wichmann is congratulated by Abby Dougherty. He analyzed methods of soil aeration for the competition.

Stacy Byrd beams with excitement after being named, Agriscience Teacher of the Year. Byrd, a Georgia instructor, is congratulated by Abby Dougherty.

Stacy Byrd's ingenious approach to teaching modern technology received national recognition at the 1999 National FFA Convention with the honor of Agriscience Teacher of the Year. Byrd, agriscience educator and FFA advisor at Eagle's Landing High School in East Point, Georgia, earned a $1,500 cash award and a plaque recognizing her exemplary teaching skills. Byrd's commitment and endless desire to implement high-tech, diversified agriscience curriculum in her former high school earned her the opportunity to design and build a new program and facility at Eagle's Landing.

Byrd's agriscience program includes instruction in small animal care, aquaculture, animal anatomy, physiology and water, chemistry, horticulture, food science, entomology and general sciences. Since Byrd's arrival, Eagle's Landing FFA membership has increased to 130, and administrators have demonstrated their support by announcing their intention to place agriscience programs in three other county high schools.

The Agriscience Teacher of the Year program recognizes outstanding agricultural education instructors who emphasize agriscience technology in their curricula through programs in biological, environmental and agribusiness technologies, and engineering sciences.

H.O. sargent awards

Dr. H.O. Sargent was a pioneer in founding New Farmers of America, an organization for African-American students that merged with the FFA in 1965. Sargent's efforts began in 1928 with the creation of the New Farmers of Virginia. The idea spread to other southern states, prompting the birth of the New Farmers of America in 1931.

The H.O. Sargent award carries the dream of creating new opportunities in premier leadership, personal growth and career success in agriculture. In 1995, the organization began to honor both members and adults across the country who work to promote diversity in agricultural education and the FFA.

This year's student winner was Jessica Skinner of the South Rowan FFA Chapter in China Grove, North Carolina. Skinner organized a tutoring program for students with limited English speaking skills, called English for Students of Other Languages (ESOL). More than 25 volunteers have committed one hour each week to work with these students. The program has prompted the high school principal to start a similar program.

Adult recipients, Dr. James Knight, Eva Griffin and David Frazier received a plaque and national recognition during the session. Knight, of Tucson, Arizona, has directed or co-directed a dozen projects on diversified recruitment and retention of students in non-traditional areas. Griffin, of Malone, Florida, has helped increase minority enrollment in the FFA chapter by four times and expanded the chapter's membership as a whole. As the Snyder FFA Chapter Advisor and agriculture teacher in New Mexico, David Frazier helped develop programs to involve minority, at-risk and special-needs students in his FFA chapter.

Talented FFA members from around the United States took over the 72nd National Convention with their dynamic music and amazing skills during the talent show. Returning acts like Travis and Tony Wolf from Spencer, Wisconsin, awed spectators by dancing on stilts. Chris Zubrick from Laingsburg, Michigan, along with his esteemed colleague Lacey Malone, wowed audiences with a magic act. There also was a barefoot bluegrass band from Cordoya, Alaska. In all, there were many outstanding acts of talent.

This year, a total of 92 members performed in 45 different acts. The groups strutted their stuff 450 times by Saturday on the talent stage set up in Freedom Hall east wing—a new twist originating in Louisville. The group was directed by Gary Maricle, who completed his thirteenth year on National Talent duty.

Talented FFA members from around the country strutted their stuff at a talent show before Thursday night's session.

national FFA chorus

Not since the movie "Son in Law," has "Thank God I'm a Country Boy" been such a big hit—that is until it came from the lips of the men on the National FFA Chorus. The chorus also hit home with a stirring rendition of "America the Beautiful" and a riveting performance of the chorus' favorite song, "Ease on Down."

The chorus was composed of 101 of the most talented vocalists in the nation who dedicated many grueling hours of practice for the long-awaited convention sessions. Powerful performances and talented solo performers made the chorus a joy for listeners. It took almost three weeks to choose these students from nearly 500 applications. The phenomenal chorus was dynamic and full of life.

The group worked with new director, Patti LaJoye, and her assistant Steve Bowen, both from Michigan.

National FFA Chorus members lifted their voices and lifted convention goers' spirits at the same time. Brad Senffer, from the Central FFA Chapter in Clifton, Illinois, led the group in, "Thank God I'm a Country Boy."

Trumpeter Joseph Losee, California, displays musical talent that would rival the "call to post" bugle at Churchill Downs.

Sponsored by Ford Division – Ford Motor Company and the National FFA Foundation General Fund

FFA members were energized before each session by the thundering sounds of the National FFA Band.
Whether they were doing the famous "chicken dance," or grooving to the tune of the Blues Brothers, members actively prepared themselves for the day's events.

The National FFA Band consisted of 105 students from across the nation. Each band member sent in an audition tape to win a coveted seat on the national stage. These dedicated individuals traveled to Louisville five days before the start of the convention to assemble as a group for the first time.
They practiced for countless hours to bring convention participants various musical renditions.

Hard work and dedication paid off as the National Proficiency Award winners were recognized on stage. These award winners excelled and conquered in their area of expertise in the supervised agricultural experience program (SAE) to become the best of FFA. Many different proficiency programs exist and 176 members proved themselves worthy of national awards. Areas range from traditional production agriculture, to the newer food science and technology, environmental science and emerging agricultural technology areas. These 44 proficiency awards recognize achievements in an ever-changing industry.

Judges interviewed finalists and inspected their record books. Then, each winner was presented with a plaque and a cash award on stage and earned the chance to participate in an international agricultural travel experience.

Even Outdoor Recreation has its own proficiency award; Jaclyn Dawn Myers was the recipient of this national award.

it all begins with middle C

As a little girl of about eight, I began to take piano lessons. I was so excited because I was going to learn to play my favorite song from Sunday school—Jesus Loves Me. I remember sitting at my teacher's piano. I was barely tall enough to see the keys and my feet dangled off the bench. Even though I was young, I so badly wanted to learn how to play piano like my big sister did. I thought that I could just start off playing right away! But learning piano, learning how to sing or playing a musical instrument doesn't work that way. You know, sitting at this bench taught me more than just piano. Yes, I had to learn the basics of piano... notes, rhythms, chords, scales. And, I even learned some of those famous songs we hear on the piano today, like chopsticks and Für Elise.

While learning the notes and the songs, I couldn't help but also learn some important lessons on life. What I found is that life is a lot like playing the piano. Just like you begin each song by finding middle C, we each have to find the center of our lives. Once we find what is most important to us—our middle C—the payoff is wonderful and we can go share our talents with the rest of the world. It all begins with middle C.

So, as I began my piano lessons as an eight-year-old girl, what do you suppose was the first thing that I had to learn? I had to learn where "middle C" was located on the keyboard. It's just a note but everything in music revolves around it. The notes on the page do not make any sense unless you have a central reference point from which to play. Middle C is that center point. I remember my piano teacher telling me to stop and to look where my hands were. Then she would tell me to start again with my thumb on middle C. If I did not start from the center, then the music would not sound right. If you think about music in general, whether you like rap, alternative, ska, or country, none of that would be possible without the basic building blocks in music. Those building blocks all begin with middle C.

In today's society it seems like we have forgotten about middle C. We have forgotten some of the basics on which everything else is built. We spend so much time wrapped up in our hectic lives and crazy schedules. We spend our days rushing to get to school on time, rushing to get the last minute homework done before class starts,

Lisa E. Ahrens, National FFA President

Ninth General Session

and rushing to get to work on time. We are in constant search of material things that will make us happy. We think we need money, new cars, and cell phones or pagers to make us a part of the cool group. Instead, we should remember what my piano teacher made me do when she told me to stop, take a second and find middle C.

So, FFA members have you ever stopped to think about where your middle C is? We all need to know where the center is in our lives. What are your core values that you use as building blocks for the rest of your life? If your life takes a wrong turn, where do you go searching for the answers to take you back to where you belong?

To truly find your own middle C, you must invest the time to discover what is most important to you. Once you find those things, plan your life around them. These are the core values that you care the most about. For me, my faith, family, friends, and our family farm are my center. Those are the four things that I can go back to when life takes me in the wrong direction. I know that my faith will always provide me with a strong foundation on which to build. I know that my family and friends will love me unconditionally no matter what happens in my life. And after a very busy schedule, nothing beats going back to the family farm that I call home. These are the most important things in my life.

These are my middle C. So what is yours? Where is your middle C? Who are the people that are most important to you—that allow you to be you? Maybe it is your mom, dad, guardian, teacher or your friend. They are a part of your center, your middle C. What is it that makes you the happiest? Is it the sport that you excel at—basketball, tennis, volleyball or track? Maybe you can sing or play piano. Recognizing what you are good at is a part of finding your middle C.

Have you ever been working on something and suddenly had the feeling, "Oh... I love this!" That is a part of your middle C!

It may seem weird to think about those things that center you. But FFA members, when you reach the point where you know your core values, you are truly living your life by what is most important to you and not what others may think. When you find your center, you will find happiness and contentment. It all begins with middle C.

So why invest the time to find middle C? Why do piano teachers constantly remind us to find middle C? How many of you have ever sat in a high school class and wondered "why?" or "What is the purpose of this class?" The purpose of finding your middle C is to understand who you really are and what you stand for. In doing that, you can find how to be happy and content no matter what is going on around you.

How many of you look in the mirror and see everything that is wrong with you? I weigh too much, I weigh too little, I am not tall enough, I wish I had blonde hair, I wish I had more athletic ability. We are constantly in a state of comparing ourselves to others around us. We judge ourselves on whether or not we have the "in" clothes, or whether or not we hang out with the cool crowd at school. We measure ourselves against these things. So what? At times I find myself comparing my abilities to my classmates or teammates, I know that I won't be as talented because their talent is a gift. I will never be able to play sports like Jose, I can't play guitar like James, and I can't harmonize like Emily. But that's part of what makes them special, not me. Once you find your middle C, you get past comparing. And that's when you find the self-confidence, the worth and the happiness that allows you to be you.

When you've found your center, can you still lose sight of what's important? Of course you can! Even I lose my center. It is just like practicing piano. The music is always there in front of you, written how it should go, but it takes continued practice to get it right.

Many of you that I have met this year know that I love to water-ski. In slalom water-skiing, it takes some balance to stay up on the ski. Part of the challenge is learning how to cut back and forth across the wake. The better I became, the faster I could begin to cut from side to side. Each time though, I had to cross that place where I started, the smooth, safe water behind the center of the boat. And if we passed another boat, or I hit some rough water when skiing, I knew that if I didn't get back to the calm, smooth water in the back to the calm, smooth water in the center, it would result in a monstrous face plant! If I worried each time that I would fall, or run into the monstrous waves from another boat, it would start to affect my performance, and the same is true in other things besides skiing. Each time a wave in life comes towards me, I have to take a step back and go back to what is really important to me. I have to find middle my C again. When I look back at those times in my life when I was upset or troubled, every time I had missed my middle C.

The purpose of finding your middle C is to understand who you really are and what you stand for. In doing that, you can find how to be happy and content no matter what is going on around you.

Every day each of us can be led away from center by all kinds of things. It may be people who ask us to be someone that we are not, or the need to be popular and the demands of all our activities. Only you know what pulls you away from your middle C. Don't let it!

Why should you find your middle C? Because the payoff is beyond belief. When you find your middle C, you find true happiness, confidence in yourself, and belief in your abilities. Just as the melody is the heart and soul of any musical piece, when you find middle C you have created your own melody—a melody that is different from anyone else's. It is one that is special in its own rite

One of the scariest things I can remember, is the first time that I had to play piano at my first recital. My hands were frozen cold, my knees were shaking, and I was so nervous I thought

I would forget the entire song!! It was going to be the first time I actually had an audience to watch me play. The only way I survived that recital was to sit down at the piano, take a deep breath, and instead of seeing 88 keys in front of me, focus on one that I knew for sure—middle C. My first recital was a success! It was the first time I got to take my talents and turn them outward for others to enjoy.

This year, one of my favorite memories on the road reminded me of all the piano recitals I used to play in. At the Mississippi State FFA Convention, the talent show had just been completed and almost everyone had headed home for the evening, except for a few. Someone asked me to play piano and almost everyone had headed home for the evening, except for a few. Someone asked me to play piano and that was all it took. My two piano playing buddies, Joseph and Ryan, took over from there. The evening was filled with singing, playing piano and laughter. We didn't realize how fast the time had gone until it was 11:30 p.m., an hour-and-a-half after we started. It didn't take much, but a few people gave the 15-20 others who were there a small gift that night. Everyone left with a smile on their face and a bounce in their step. All because Joseph and Ryan weren't afraid to share their talents with others.

God gave us each many special talents. Simply occupying space is not why we were put on this earth. There is so much more than that to do. It is how you interact with others around you to create the harmonies in your life. Are you letting your talents spill over into other people's lives? That is where you can truly make a difference in this world. The greatest joy we can experience is not only our achievements, but helping someone else reach his or her own accomplishment as well. You must find your center, so you can use your abilities to help others around you, to help make your family better, your community better, and help make our world better. You must create and share your melody. It doesn't have to be drastic! It is the little notes that start the melodies like smiling at a stranger on the street or telling your parents you love them. Before long, all those little notes form the melody that will become your masterpiece.

My friends, take time to find your middle C. Create your own melody, and share it with the rest of the world.

when is the end?

José Santiago, Southern Region Vice President
72nd National FFA Convention
Sixth Convention Session

I had a great time in high school! I played basketball, baseball, I swam and I also loved gymnastics! In fact I wanted to be in everything! I wanted to fit in with the other students and be seen as cool. It was exhausting! Soon after getting involved, I would ask myself, "When is the end of the basketball season?" "When is the last volleyball game?" or "When is the end of my high school years?" Maybe you have asked yourself these same questions.

Throughout the years I have seen that materialistic aspects of life like sports, clothing and money have endings! You are in high school, and in a couple years you will be in college, working, or both. You might be on a baseball team, in the band, in different organizations or involved in your church. You may find yourself asking "When will this activity end?"

The answer to that question may be very simple—the last baseball game of the season or the final band concert. In the big picture of life there are questions that are hard to answer. They are more difficult because they involve people and our ability to give and forgive in these relationships.

When is the end of giving? What does giving even mean? Does it mean giving everything away? No way, Jose! You may say, "Why should I give if no one ever has given me anything?" We are so focused on what we receive and how we look or how cool we are, when what really matters is giving from the heart. I am frustrated when I see others putting materialistic things first instead of extending their hand to those people who need someone. Giving! What a simple concept, but how much we struggle with it! Givers are great human beings! They love you for who you are. They inspire you, they care and they give without expecting anything in return!

When I was ten years old I learned the true meaning of giving. Now, ten was a pretty cool age because I learned how to ride my bike. My mom would hold my bicycle steady for me because I was not too coordinated! One day I asked my mom if I could go outside to ride my bicycle, but she told me "no" because she was busy! Guess what? I went right outside and climbed on that bike without her approval. Bad idea! With my unsteady balance and a lack of experience,

I wobbled right out into the street just in time to lose control. I looked up to see that there were five cars coming from one direction and one car from the other.

You don't need to be a scientist, an Olympian, a national officer or even a chapter officer to be a giver. Start now. Give encouragement to a friend who needs it. Hug your teammates.... Start now because tomorrow may be too late! Commit today to a life of giving.

That is all I remember. I broke my leg, but I was going to be fine. The ambulance carried me to the hospital and my mom met me there. I was super scared, not because of the pain in my leg, but because I had disobeyed my mom. I thought I would be in big trouble. I had my head down and I said, "Mom, I am so sorry". My mom said, "Jose it doesn't matter to me, the only thing that matters is that I still have you. I love you no matter what." That moment I learned what giving is. My mom was able to give her love and support to me when she could have been angry.

So, when is the end of giving? Never! My friends, I believe that living a life of giving never ends! You will give others hope that will live on forever as they share that hope throughout the world. When was the last time that you told your friend, dad, mom, teacher or FFA advisor that you love them because they give to you? FFA members, you have shown me from the very first time that I came to convention that this organization is for people who want to give of themselves and help others.

I count myself blessed because I have seen you give of yourselves in community service, helping other members succeed and helping the agricultural industry by learning and caring about its future. You have taught me that it is not about building my dreams, it is about building people. Each time that you gave me a ride to the airport, invited me to stay in your homes or wrote me a letter, I saw that you, FFA members, are the best givers in the world.

You don't need to be a scientist, an Olympian, a national officer or even a chapter officer to be a giver. Start now. Give encouragement to a friend who needs it. Hug your teammates. Write to your best friend to tell them how much you care. Put your arm around your mom and dad and say, "I love you." Start now, because tomorrow may be too late! Commit today to a life of giving.

When you do, you will find that giving is easy with your friends. But it is very tough to give to someone who has hurt you. To truly live a life of giving you must also live a life of forgiving. So when is the end of forgiving?

OOPS! You know we all make mistakes. It is really hard to accept that and forgive ourselves. It's even more difficult to forgive those people around us! I guarantee you that one of the most important things that you can give to someone is forgiveness. When is the end of forgiving others?

As a child I experienced challenges and struggles forced me to learn forgiveness the hard way. My father was an alcoholic. In December of 1979, I was eight months old. One night my Dad came home intoxicated and started to abuse my mom. He broke her left arm and threw her down the stairs. But that was not all. I was in my crib and he took me in his arms and threw me from a window and walked out of our lives forever. I grew up with physical impairments and learning disabilities. My friends, I was not able to walk because of the damage to my back. The doctors told my mom that I would never be able to walk, run or even play. I had to go through a lot of therapy. During one of my swimming sessions a miracle occurred! After seven years I moved my legs for the very first time. God truly blessed me with this miracle! From that point on, I continued with more intensive rehabilitation. For the first time I hoped that I could live a normal life. But through this entire time, I still didn't know why. "Why am I in this wheelchair? Why do I need special education class? Why do others have a dad while I don't?"

retiring address

In December of 1991 my world fell apart when my mom gave me the answers to the questions—the story I just shared with you. I remembered feeling very angry with my dad. One day my mother sat me down and said, "Jose, don't be mad towards your father, because he is a human being. We must forgive because we all make mistakes." But I was still angry with my dad, I blamed God and I was unhappy with my life.

I realized that if my mother could avoid hating my father for abusing her, then I could also be strong enough to forgive him. It was very difficult to do, but I let go of the anger. I decided that even though he hurt everyone in my family and chose not to be a part of our lives, I could still love him. I confess to you that my biggest dream in life is to meet him and tell him, "I love you, Dad!" I can do this because I made a conscious choice to give him the gift of forgiveness.

Close your eyes and think about a time when you made a mistake. Were you given the gift of forgiveness? I hope you were.

If your neighbor talks negatively about you forgive them. If you fail, forgive yourself. Because my friends, when you forgive, you can be forgiven! When is the end of forgiving?

Never! When we live a life of giving and forgiving, our actions will live on forever, making those who come after us happier and more successful. The hard part for us is living a life of giving and forgiving day by day.

One simple answer for two difficult questions! When is the end of giving? Never! When is the end of forgiving? Never! When we give and forgive, we are appreciating people around us. It's so easy to forget about people who are starving in other countries, dying from disease or who need a little compassion. We are fortunate to live in a country where families are valued and peace and freedom reign.

FFA members, you are exceptional. I see enough potential giving and forgiving in you to bring hope to the homeless, love to the lost and strength to the weak. FFA members give and forgive! Because when is the end of giving and forgiving? You have the answer! May God bless all of you!

"We stand tall only because we stand on the backs of those who came before us." FFA members were enraptured as Danny Glover recounted his boyhood on his grandparents' farm. Glover was sponsored by The Humana Foundation as a special project of the National FFA Foundation.

As a Vietnam veteran who was severely disfigured when a grenade exploded in his hand, Dave Roever relayed a message of survival and overcoming adversity. His powerful oration brought FFA members to tears, then laughter, and left them filled with hope. Roever was sponsored by United Parcel Service (UPS) as a special project of the National FFA Foundation.

convention speakers

Humorist and motivational speaker Emory Austin offered a message of hope and inspiration to FFA members. "The world needs your ounce of difference," she told the crowd gathered in Freedom Hall.

Worldwide adventurer and author Jaime Clark mesmerized and entertained FFA members with his inspiring story of human triumph. He shared his message of overcoming obstacles and coping with rapid change.

people need people

James Garner, Western Region Vice President
72nd National FFA Convention
Eighth Convention Session

*Where were you when I needed you?
I needed to talk, I needed a friend.
You make me laugh and you make me smile.
But it's hard when you're gone awhile.
And so I found that people need people.*

Many times over the last twelve months, I would pick up a guitar just to play and soothe my soul. Many times people asked the question, "What one thing did you learn most from this year?" To be honest, it was always hard to give just one answer, but that answer finally came to me one day as I was playing the guitar. So I thought, why not write a song? One of my dreams is to become a songwriter, so here was my chance. Now, unfortunately, I can't whip out my guitar and sing a song every time someone asks the question, "What did you learn most this year?" But I do know that what I learned most was that the people around me—my friends, family, and loved ones—are vital to my happiness. FFA members, I wouldn't be surprised to find out that you feel the same way. It is imperative that you fulfill your need for friendship, fill your life with healthy and positive friends, and dedicate effort and time to nurture a positive relationship.

SONG:

*It's the same old line.
I want this and I want that.
If I just had more time.
If I just had more money.
If I just had it all.
But what you and I really need to find true happiness.
Well it's not from success,
it's not by being the best,
cause I found that people need people.*

I want, I want, I want. How many times do we hear that in our lives? How many times have we said it before? The answer is probably too many times. I want to be rich. I want to be famous. I want to be a pro wrestler. I want to be like Mike. I want to be Shania Twain. I want to be an international man of mystery like Austin Powers. I want to be Johnny Cash—okay, maybe that's only me. The point is we go through life with many wants, but the only thing that really matters is our needs. FFA members, the fact of the matter is that one of those needs is social interaction...in other words friendship. Now you're probably thinking,

"James, that's not a need!" Air, water, food and shelter are needs to sustain life. In fact, on the hierarchy of basic human needs, those are the top four. Obviously you will die without those, but number five behind those is social interaction—the need for a friend. Now, I'm sure that each of you have people in your lives that are special to you. You enjoy spending time with them and they are a real part of you and when you're not around them there is a feeling of emptiness and dejection.

I have always been a huge drag racing fan. My dad had raced and worked on crews and I loved to go to the races. The one race that I always wanted to attend was the U.S. Nationals in Indianapolis. It was the mother of all drag races—the biggest one in the world! This year I had the chance to go and I was pumped. I thought that this was going to be the greatest thing in my life. I would go to the races for three straight days and see cars speeding at three hundred miles an hour, sometimes on fire, and people cheering and yelling for it all. The race was great, but as I left the race track I had the emptiest feeling in the world. It was no doubt the loneliest time of my life. I sat in the grandstands for six hours by myself with no one to talk to. Yes, there were a hundred thousand people there, but none were my friends. I needed to be with someone I knew.

How many times is it the same old line? I'll be happy if I get elected to chapter office or if I make the high school basketball team. None of that matters if no one is there to share it with you. For instance, you go to a basketball court and make two hundred shots in a row, but no one else was there to see you. It would be great if someone could enjoy the moment with you. If no one is there to share that moment, it could be pretty lonely. Ladies and gentlemen, each of us must find people to fill that need in our lives. FFA members, I'm asking you to think about your wants and needs, and really put them into perspective. Put people who add quality to your life at the top of your list.

SONG:

*There's a void in my life and it cuts me like a knife.
I must have someone there.
Any ol' person won't fit the shoe.
There's certain things they gotta do.
And I'm just looking for a friend.
When I'm up I want some fun and when I'm down I'm on the run.
But then you come and pick me up.
You give me comfort and love.
And I found that people need people.*

We all have a need—a need for a friend. But any old person won't fit the shoe—there are certain things they gotta do. Think about it this way. The plumbing in your house starts to go out and it needs to be fixed. It needs to be fixed by a plumber, but you can't afford one, so you just use duct tape to fix the problem. The need is fulfilled, but not in a good way. It's not the best possible fit, but it suffices. How many times do we let that happen in our lives with relationships? I'm afraid the answer is too many times. Our need for friendship must be filled with healthy relationships, with people who add quality to our lives. What is a healthy relationship? Well it's one that provides encouragement, fun, comfort and love.

When I'm up and I want to have some fun, I get together with my college roommates, Nate and Ryan. Now you must understand that Nate and Ryan are big on exercise. As for me, I like to have a little cover for the winter, if you know what I mean. But they convinced me to play racquetball and it was a lot fun. I don't know what it was, maybe the fact that the ball seemed to hit me square between the eyes more often than square on the racquet, but it was fun. We spent more time rolling around on the ground laughing than playing racquetball. But it is also when I'm down, that my two friends provide pick me up and comfort. If I came from school and had a bad day, they were there to encourage and console me. I'm sure you've heard the phrase, choose your friends wisely. It couldn't be more true. FFA members surround yourself with people who bring you up, not drag you down. At school, you might feel like you can't be with the "in-crowd" so you'll just settle to be with negative people. Your well-being, your happiness and your inner-peace are far too important to just have the attitude of "I'll settle for this." FFA members, seek out the people who give you comfort and love.

SONG:

*And in our lives we're so wrapped up just tryin' to get by.
How do I grow a friend?
One who's with me to the end.
It's not an easy thing to do.
You must commit and see it through to grow that friend.
But the one thing we never seem to give.
It's the most precious thing of all.
Cause when people need people.
They really need their time.*

FFA members, think of someone important to you. Three things can happen to your relationship by tomorrow. It could get weaker, it could stay the same or it could grow stronger. I would like to think that we would all want our relationships with others to grow stronger. How do you grow a friend who's with you to the end? It's not an easy thing to do. You must commit and see it through.

When I was in second grade, I was determined to learn all of the presidents of the United States. Of course that is not exactly a normal thing for a seven-year-old to do. But then there has never really been anything "normal" about me. So, every waking moment, I was reading a book about presidents, watching a biography, or dressing up like Franklin Roosevelt for Halloween in third grade or Abe Lincoln the following year. I had problems. But, I was dedicated and it paid off. I could ramble off every president from George Washington to Ronald Reagan, (it was the eighties) and I could tell you a fact about each one. I could tell you John Adams was the first to live in the White House. Andrew Jackson had a pet parrot that would swear. William Henry Harrison only served one month. James Buchanan was the only bachelor. James Garfield could write in Greek with his left hand and Latin with his right hand at the same time. The list went on and on.

The same is true to build a healthy relationship. No, you don't have to memorize the presidents, but you do have to be dedicated and determined to care about another person and to totally focus on strengthening your friendship. The attitude of "I'll get by" or "This is good enough," does not work with people—it certainly doesn't grow any type of relationship. The most precious thing you can give to another person is your time.

Folks, we can be serious about building a healthy relationship until we are blue in the face, but if we don't take the time it will never happen. Strong friendships are built when people do things together. It can be playing cards, Nintendo, golf, bowling or a great talk on a Sunday afternoon. As some of you know, I'm a huge Johnny Cash fan. I would love to build a great friendship with him. I have been very determined to do that for many years now. My first try to establish a friendship was after one of his shows. I ran around the back of the auditorium where his bus was parked. Just as he was stepping on to the bus, I stopped him.

I was just a little nervous—actually very nervous. In fact, I was so nervous that my voice went up eight octaves and I screeched, "I'm your biggest fan." In his deep voice he replied, "Glad to know you." The next words out of my mouth were quite possibly the dumbest I have ever said: "I can sing just like you!" He replied half jokingly, "I'm sure you can son." Needless to say our relationship didn't have the greatest start. But I was still determined. Since 1993, I have invited Johnny Cash to my home each year on February 26th to celebrate his birthday. Sadly enough, he has not shown up for six years straight. I have concluded that our relationship will never grow because we have not spent any time together. The energy and effort was there, but no time was invested.

Folks, we get so wrapped up in day to day life. We have homework to do, soccer practice, football practice and we have chores to do—it's tough! But when it's all said and done, are we going to remember the B+ we received on the math test? Are we going to remember that no nail polish goes with national blue and corn gold? I don't think so. I sincerely hope we will all remember the people who were there for us when we needed them, who listened and who were true friends. There are a handful of people in our lives who fulfill our need of friendship. Take the time to grow and sustain those friendships.

We all need positive relationships. We want them to add quality to our lives. When you leave here today, I ask that you do two things. On your way home, I want you to think of one person in your life who is important to you. Make a personal commitment to strengthen your relationship. Secondly, make a list of all the ways you can spend time with that person. Whether the person is a parent, teacher or a friend you've had since second grade, start planning activities you can do together. Make the commitment to share yourself and your time with people you care about.

Don't let it be the same old line. Fill the void in your life. Listen, laugh, smile and give your time to others.

Happiness comes not from success or from being the best. It comes from being a friend, because ... people... need ... people.

how do you measure up?

Emily Buxton, Eastern Region Vice President
72nd National FFA Convention
Fifth Convention Session

According to grandma's refrigerator I am short. See, I grew up with six cousins and a little brother. Between the oldest and youngest there are only six years. All of us live within three miles of one another, so we rode the school bus together and were in the same Sunday school classes.

Nine times a year we were at grandma and grandpa's house for either a birthday or Christmas. I don't know when this all started but it became tradition to grab the measuring stick out of the hall closet, stand tall with our backs against the refrigerator, and measure our height by using the magnets as markers. We kept track of our heights on a little index card that we displayed on the refrigerator for all to see.

I wrote the numbers "five, five" by my name when I was probably thirteen or fourteen. I didn't realize then that they would never change again. I watched as birthday after birthday, Christmas after Christmas, each of the others erased their numbers and recorded bigger ones. The girls shot past me. Soon the boys did, too. My little brother even grew to be taller than the refrigerator. So I am officially the shortest cousin.

All of us probably have memories of measuring our height as we grew up. Many times a certain height meant we were allowed to do something. Like when you were big enough to wear hand-me-downs from a favorite brother or sister, or you were finally taller than that red stick and you could ride the "real" roller coasters. But as we've grown older, the ways that we measure ourselves have changed a little.

For many of us, the things and people we measure ourselves against affect how we think about ourselves and how we treat others.

Even during a typical morning before school, we are surrounded by all kinds of measurements. The box that our favorite cereal comes in says that one serving is 3/4 cup. There is a size printed on the tag of our shirt and jeans and even in our shoes. As we're driving, we glance at the speedometer to measure our speed compared to the sign we see up ahead. We are constantly measuring things, so it only makes sense that we measure ourselves as well.

But the most important thing is how you measure yourself. The method you use to measure yourself determines your opinion of your self-worth. So how do you measure up when it comes to measuring yourself? Do you measure yourself by the size of your clothes, whether you have a boyfriend or girlfriend, the grades on your report card, points you score in a ball game, the office you hold in your chapter, the amount of money in your wallet? The list goes on and on. Deep down I think that most of us realize measuring ourselves according to physical aspects is pretty superficial. But, I still find myself doing it at times, and I'm sure you do too.

When you are trying to be your creative best, then you have no one to compete with or compare yourself to only your own potential. When someone else believes in us, we believe in ourselves. An individual who says they believe in you is really saying they believe in your potential to be your creative best. So by sharing your belief in others, you will be showing them the best way to measure themselves.

Maybe that's because we feel so connected to the things we do or the way we look. We just have to make sure that those things don't become our identity. Sure, they can be an important part of us, but they aren't us. Sometimes we may put too much emphasis on a certain part of our lives and we measure ourselves by that. We need balance in our lives.

We all have times when we feel better about ourselves than other times. What kinds of things do you let determine that? Sometimes even things we consider healthy can become unhealthy when they are not in balance. For instance, all of us feel great when we are given attention. That's a healthy, natural need. But, this could be unhealthy if someone measured himself according to how much attention he received, whether it was a talk with a friend or time in the principal's office. Or, we've all heard that being physically fit gives us more energy and prevents us from becoming sick. This could cross the line to unhealthy though, if someone measured herself against models in magazines and was willing to starve herself to look that way.

The dangerous thing about measuring ourselves the wrong way is that we feel inadequate. And when we feel inadequate, then we act that way. We can never be our best, if we don't think we are capable of being our best.

How do you measure up against your creative best? Well, it's different for each person. That's because we are each different. The worst thing we can do is measure ourselves by comparing ourselves to others.

All through elementary school, I wanted more than anything to have a part in our school Christmas plays. I watched the older students and looked up to them so much. Finally I was able to try out for a part when I was in the sixth grade. The play was called Baa-Baa Bethlehem and all the main characters were sheep. This was especially exciting for me because I had sheep for my 4-H projects and had loved them all my life. I wanted to be a sheep in the play so badly.

When the parts were announced I was a little disappointed. I was a sheep, which is what I wanted, but I was

retiring address

Blanche. And Blanche's character was just what she sounds like—blah.

We all wore white sweatshirts and sweat pants, except the grumpy black sheep, Adrian and Angie. My pretty friend Stacey was the beautiful model sheep with a pink feather boa. Erica was a spunky singer, and so she was the rock star sheep with sunglasses and a guitar. Steve was very smart so he was the intellectual sheep with big glasses and a necktie. All the sheep wore something to reflect their personalities. And me? All I wore was plain old white. If these really reflected each of our personalities, then what did this say about me and my character?

But soon Blanche and I both discovered that we hadn't been measuring ourselves very well. During the play all of the sheep went to visit baby Jesus and share their gifts with him. Blanche didn't think she had any gifts to share because she had been comparing herself to each of the others. But she discovered that she had the best and most important gift of all—the gift of love. And I discovered that I couldn't keep comparing myself to other people, because that would never allow me to be all I am meant to be. You are unique. Too often we say that word unique when someone is extremely different. But that doesn't mean you have to have five earrings in one ear or a hidden tattoo. We are all different. In the book of Galatians, chapter six, verses four and five Paul writes, "Make a careful exploration of who you are and the work you have been given, and then sink yourself into that. Don't be impressed with yourself. Don't compare yourself with others. Each of you must take responsibility for doing the creative best you can with your own life."

Many of us never do find out what our true potential is—our creative best—because we quit trying when we failed once, or because we're simply afraid of what others will say. We can't measure ourselves by our past, only by our futures—by our potential to be our creative best. The only thing you should be measuring yourself against is your own potential—and that is whatever you believe it is.

When we are measuring ourselves only against our own creative best, then we're not comparing ourselves to others. And when we're not comparing ourselves to others, we begin to see them differently.

Of course this isn't the norm in high school. We tend to give everyone a label. We even have groups in school so that everyone who measures up a certain way can be with others who are similar. You all know the cliques I am talking about. But I truly believe that if you start with yourself and you change the way you measure yourself, then ultimately you will change the way you measure others. How do you measure up when it comes to measuring others? If you stop judging others by their mistakes, and instead measure them by the potential you see in them, then not only will you look at them differently, but they will begin to see themselves differently. If someone accepts them not because of their physical appearance, but simply because of their heart, then the way they measure themselves may change too. Also, you won't view others as a threat anymore. Instead of being jealous of someone's talents or wealth, you can support them to help them be their creative best.

When you are trying to be your creative best, then you have no one to compete with or compare yourself to—only your own potential. When someone else believes in us, we believe in ourselves. An individual who says they believe in you is really saying they believe in your potential to be your creative best. So by sharing your belief in others, you will be showing them the best way to measure themselves.

Listen to your next conversation with a friend. If that friend says something about feeling bad because of his grades or her appearance, remind your friend that's not what makes them unique.

It will also help you stay in check with how you are viewing yourviewing yourself.

And it can go farther than your good friends. Do you even say hi or smile at your classmates when you walk down the halls of your school? We know there are students at our school who are unhappy, yet we usually ignore them. We tell ourselves that they're not one of our friends, so it's not our responsibility to care about them. But it is our responsibility!

And eventually, when we accept and respect everyone, when we measure others not by the person others judge them to be, but by the person we know they can be, then just imagine what our schools could be like.

How we measure ourselves determines so much in our lives. It definitely takes effort on our part to change how we measure ourselves to be our creative best and how we measure others to help them become their creative best. It's a different way of thinking, acting and living.

There are still those in this world who may measure you by your height, weight, I.Q., or salary. But, there's more to you than what they see when they look at you. It is more than the grades on your report card, more than the points you score in a ball game, more than the office that you hold, more than the money in your wallet. You are a unique individual with the potential to do as much as you believe. The only thing holding you back is deciding—how do you measure up?

mediocre madness

"Local football star quits because of conflict with coach"

"Workers demand fewer hours and higher wages"

"Polls say character and integrity are not nearly as important as what he does for our economy"

"It wasn't my job, it's not my fault"

Extra!! Extra!! Read all about it. It's the newest wave that is sweeping the nation. It's in our schools and in our families. It's in small towns and large cities. Haven't you heard? This madness has swept into our lives. It is being delivered through our televisions and movies. It is evident in the headlines of the newspapers that are being dropped off at our front door steps. Oh, come on! You know what I am talking about. It is a craze that you and I see everyday in our lives and in the people around us. We have become so used to it. The madness is mediocrity.

For those of you who might be wondering what I mean by mediocrity, let me explain. It means I'll settle for being a five, even though I have the potential to be a ten. It means taking the easy way. It's the young man who quits when it hurts. It's the people who don't count our change back at the cash register or who don't say "please" and "thank you." It's lazy people who spend all their time whining. It's families that don't talk. It's people without hope. Mediocre means average. We settle for average. We settle for average grades, average friends, average teachers and preachers. We settle for average leaders. Our biggest challenge in an average world is average people. In fact, too many times we, as individuals, settle for being mediocre.

Charles Swindoll writes, "The greatest waste of our natural resources is the number of people who never achieve their potential. Get out of that slow lane. Shift into that fast lane. If you think you can't, you won't. If you think you can, there's a good chance you will. Even making the effort will make you feel like a new person. Reputations are made by searching for things that can't be done and doing them. Aim low: boring. Aim high: soaring."

Andy Armbruster, Central Region Vice President
72nd National FFA Convention
Fourth Convention Session

If you want to soar like a bald eagle that flies majestically in the sky with pride, if you want to live above the level of mediocrity, if you want to be a ten instead of a five, then, maybe, you might want to hear about a few things that I have learned. Now, there's no scientific proof to back up what I am going to share with you, and I doubt there is any information in your textbooks at school to support me. My information comes from life, from daily events and people I have seen soar. In fact, it comes from some of the things I have witnessed many of you do this year.

To fight mediocre madness in our lives, it begins with you and your vision - not so much by what you see through your eyes but what you see in your mind. Vision. It's such an exciting word. It's a word that moves a person or group forward. Vision sees beyond now and beyond average. My junior high basketball coach said, "Every time you go to bed at night, visualize yourself making all your free throws." Visualize success. If you want to be the best creed speaker, then visualize yourself giving the creed to the best of your abilities. Picture yourself winning the championship football game. Think about what the people there would say and how you would feel. Taste it. Touch it. Grab it. Visualize yourself doing the right thing and being around the right people. Average people waste their time thinking about who did what to them or how they will just barely get by in their next challenge. The more our minds become cluttered with the garbage of today's society, the greater the chance we will have to be mediocre. Instead, we should fill our minds with visions of excellence. People who soar have vision.

Once you have visualized yourself soaring, the next step begins with you and your attitude. The one thing that we have total control of in any situation is our attitude. You may not know that I ran for national FFA office twice. For more than six years I had visualized my name being announced at the 70th National FFA Convention as a newly elected member of the national FFA officer team. I knew what the goose bumps would feel like. I had visions of myself running up on stage congratulating my new teammates. When my name was not called on that Saturday afternoon, I had about ten minutes until the end of that session when I would begin to see all the people who had supported me that fall. In those ten minutes, I thought about having a pity party for myself when I saw my supporters. I thought the committee had made a mistake - a big mistake. I was angry, I was sad and I was upset. But in those same ten minutes, I sat there with six empty seats around me and thought, "Listen to yourself. I can act how most people would expect me to act. I can be angry and upset and drag others down with me, or I can pull myself together and focus on FFA's six new leaders." I focused on the growing experience, and even focused on where I wanted to be in the future. Even in our most challenging times, no matter what the situation is, we have control over our attitudes. When we are around negative people, our attitudes begin to become negative. Our talk becomes negative. And soon, our actions become negative. And before we know it, we're just like everyone else. It is just not worth it. Those type of average people that can drag us down are, in my mind, people who are too lazy to take control of their attitudes and make the most of the situation. People who live above the level of mediocrity have learned to control their attitudes.

Now there are going to be times when you visualize yourself flying and you have total control of your attitude, but the hard knocks of life are beating down your front door. That's when you focus on yourself and your faith. Not only do I mean faith in a power from up above, but I mean faith in ourselves and faith in others. We can choose to live a life of fear or a life of faith. We cannot have both. We can fear that our friends might break their promises. We can fear the food in the school cafeteria. We can fear that we might not go to college, or we can have faith that everything will fall into place and it will all work out. Last June I received a phone call from my parents concerning my grandmother. She had been diagnosed with cancer. She had lived by herself for thirty years and this was to be the biggest and last challenge she would face. No matter how sick she got, no matter how hard it was for my mom and our family, Grandma Ellen had faith that when she passed on she would be in a better place.

She had faith in her family that we would make it through the difficult times. She had simple faith. Cancer may have taken my grandmother's life, but it didn't take a spirit and a love of a family, because we had faith. People who live a life of faith are not caught up in mediocre madness.

Making visions reality, controlling our attitudes, and living a life of faith begins with you. Many people can support and help us along the way, but it is up to our individual commitment to soar like an eagle and not get caught up in mediocre madness.

Making visions reality, controlling our attitudes, and living a life of faith begins with you. Many people can support and help us along the way, but it is up to our individual commitment to soar like an eagle and not get caught up in mediocre madness.

To try to sum up this entire year with one retiring address, well, it would be a little crazy, but I did write a few words that I would like to share with you.

*Countless hours away from home,
This year was all of ours, not just my own.*

*Conventions, conferences, and flights,
Throughout this year, I have seen the sights. Many were big and fancy, you see, From Vice President Gore, to the Japanese Sea.*

*But it's the little things I have liked so much, Like the promise of hope and the human touch. They were e-mails from members, friends and family, too.
You all made this year a success and for that, I thank you.*

You see, it was these little things that have kept me going, Like your good attitudes that kept you growing.

A little thing and a simple thing I have enjoyed so much Have been the sunsets. They are the mark of God's great touch. They were in Florida, Oregon, and Oklahoma, too. They were the perfect ending to spending a day with one of you.

*Today, another sun sets for me, But that's ok, the good Lord has made plans, you see. Just remember, in our lives it is so easy to be mediocre.
But with a little faith, attitude, and vision, you can be like that eagle and soar.*

*A chapter is almost complete in this book of my own,
Mom, Dad, and K-State friends, it's time—I'm coming home.*

Every time the sun sets, another day ends. But a new one is just around the corner. It's up to you to make the most of that day. As you leave this convention, decide what kind of attitude you're going to have. Will you settle for mediocrity? Or will you expand your vision and rely on your faith? FFA members, I challenge you to let the sun set on mediocre madness. Only then can you truly spread your wings and soar.

what matters most

Abby Dougherty, National FFA Secretary
72nd National FFA Convention
Second Convention Session

Let's see, I got this e-mail from Patrick in Mississippi and he says what matters most to him is, "The people who instilled in me the values and morals that I hold so dear to my heart." Dusti from Arizona says, "What matters most to me is a friend who will stay by me to the end."

According to Matt from Illinois, "My family is what matters most." What matters most to Jamie from Idaho is "family and friends who build me up." Kelly from Oklahoma e-mailed that what mattered most to him is "trust in God." And Derin from Wisconsin says that what matters most to her "is that I can and do believe in myself."

But how do I reply to the question, what matters most?

I have always loved the verse from 1 Corinthians 13:13 which is about giving others faith, hope and love. Those three things will remain, hold true and allow you to help others and yourself achieve success. It is important to me to have faith in yourself, encourage others with hope, and live a life of love—it can be one of the most remarkable things you do.

In third grade I became very interested in space and astronauts. In fact, I became so interested that when I finished my work in class I would go to the learning lab and do reports on planets. I wanted to be an astronaut so badly. I wanted to be the first person to walk on Jupiter! So you can imagine my disappointment when I found out that Jupiter is a gaseous planet and no one will ever be able to set foot there. But more than being an astronaut, I wanted to be a great person and that people would write about in the history books. Then other third graders could learn about my adventures. So what mattered most to me in third grade was becoming a famous astronaut like Neil Armstrong.

Neil Armstrong was the first to take steps on the moon. Our generation grew up knowing that man had set foot on moon. It didn't seem like such a big deal because so many people had done it. But for our parents and grandparents, this was beyond their wildest imagination. In 1969, millions of Americans put their faith and belief in Neil Armstrong, as he did what many believed to be the impossible. I cannot imagine the faith Neil Armstrong must have had in himself to take such a risk.

To me having faith means believing in yourself, having confidence in your abilities and knowing you can accomplish your goals. It can be one of the toughest things you'll ever have to do.

As a little child, I thought that what mattered most was a famous astronaut, a pioneer or even a country music star. With my involvement in the FFA, I found out that having a title after my name or winning a contest really aren't what matters.

When I was in eighth grade I entered the state piano competition. I went in and played my piece, Clementi's Opus No. 36 movements one, two and three. I received a perfect score and attained a Division I rating. I was so pumped that I decided to move up to a more advanced level next year. I picked out the song Fantasy in D Minor by Mozart. This was one of the most difficult pieces I had ever played. It had difficult rhythms and runs, so I practiced and practiced. At the competition I had faith that I could play my piece. I played my heart out for the judge. It was the best I had ever played. I anxiously waited outside for my results. When I found out I had received a Division II rating, I was crushed! I read through all of the judge's comments and he did not write one positive comment. I was so heartbroken. I sat outside the room and cried. After that competition I totally lost interest in playing the piano and I stopped taking lessons. I chose to listen to one person's remarks on only one song. I lost faith in my piano skills and I lost faith in myself.

I learned from my experience that what matters most to me is not listening to what others say, but listening to my heart. It's only natural to remember the hurtful things that people say about us, but we truly become successful when we rise above that and put faith in ourselves.

What does faith mean to you? It means giving oral reasons in a career development event, even though you dread it. It means running for a chapter or regional office, or organizing a community activity. It all comes down to having faith in yourself and faith in a higher power.

When you have faith in yourself, you encourage others and give them hope.

When I was in fourth grade, we studied Indiana and American history. I learned all about the pioneers settling in my home state. We then moved on to learning about the Oregon Trail and I became fascinated by the pioneers.

I wanted to be a pioneer! I would go out to the field and pick some ears of corn and crush it into corn dust to make corn bread. I thought that they had so many exciting adventures.

But then I learned that they traveled in freezing cold, many times went without food and they had to sleep under the wagon, no matter if it rained or snowed. I then decided that maybe being a pioneer wasn't all it was cracked up to be. I was still amazed by the pioneers' story of everlasting hope. To leave your home and travel west to an unknown land would require having hope that stands the test of time. Many of them went hungry, cold and had to fight off illness. Families were down to nothing but hope—it kept their pioneering spirit alive.

retiring address

To encourage and support someone in achieving their goals is to give them hope.

While I was in Hawaii for their state FFA convention I witnessed hope! Mahina, Jason and Shannon are three state officers I met there. They took me to a waterfall so we could go swimming. Over by the waterfall, there was a rock—a really big and slippery rock! Shannon tried to climb to the top of the rock several times but couldn't quite make it because of the tremendous upper body strength it required. Even when Mahina tried to help her, it still proved to be too difficult. Shannon was getting tired and discouraged but Mahina kept encouraging her. After several attempts Mahina got Shannon to the top of that rock. It was Mahina's belief in Shannon that gave her the hope to continue.

As I watched Shannon and Mahina I realized how important supporters are! We need people to encourage us. Sometimes they are the ones who make us stick with our goals and dreams.

To give hope to others can be very positive and powerful. Let others in your chapter and school, know that you believe in them by the little things you do. Give them a good-luck card before they compete in the creed speaking contest. Give someone more responsibility for chapter activities, or simply give a little hope. I can promise you will be surprised by what happens. More people will achieve greater success! What matters most to me is providing hope for others to help them succeed.

When we give others hope, it let's them know that you care about them. But more importantly you are living a life full of love.

"Faith, hope and love will remain but the greatest of these is love." I love that verse from 1 Corinthians. That leads me to the question, "How do we define love?" When I think of what love might look like, I think of the people in my life—family and friends. Living a life of love means taking care of the relationships with your family and friends.

Growing up, my parents and sisters taught me many lessons. I may not specifically remember the time Mom taught me how to make my bed or when Dad taught me how to fish. It was all of those little lessons that instilled in me the values that I have today. It's the little moments with our family members that make us who we are.

One of those moments happened every Saturday night as my sisters and I tuned in to watch Barbara Mandrell and The Mandrell Sisters. It was pretty convenient because there were three Mandrells and there just so happened to be three of us.

We couldn't resist pretending to be the Mandrell Sisters. My oldest sister Jill was Barbara, my sister Erin was Louise and I was Irlene. We would sing along and pretend to be country music stars. There was no end to the talent in our family.

The reason we liked the Mandrell Show so much was because they were all sisters and shared their love for each other every Saturday night as they played and sang together. I understand that love and close relationship because that's what we share in our family. The singing may not have been the same, but the closeness sure was.

The lesson that I may have learned the most this year, is just how important relationships with families and friends are. These special people in my life have given me the love I needed to be who am I today.

What matters the very most to me is living a life of love.

We should continue to share love with everyone we meet. You can give love to others by helping a friend with a tough homework assignment, talking to the new student in school, or simply encouraging someone to join FFA.

As a little child, I thought that what mattered most was being a famous astronaut, a pioneer or even a country music star. With my involvement in the FFA, I found out that having a title after my name or winning a contest really aren't what matters.

Dear FFA members,

Thank you for the best year of my life! I have discovered this year that what matters most to me is having FAITH in myself, giving HOPE to others and living a life of LOVE. What matters most to you? I encourage you to discover your own answer. Once you do, then pursue those things passionately.

Thanks again!

I believe in you,
Abby :)

I guess I can't pick just one thing that matters the most to me. But I know when you have faith in yourself, when you encourage others with hope, and when you live a life of love that's when life begins to matter.

national chapter awards

Sponsored by Cargill and the National FFA Foundation General Fund

The National Chapter Award is designed to recognize excellence in chapter activities and programs. This year, 7,268 chapters vied for a National Chapter Award. Areas include developing student leaders, working together to form strong chapters and community development programs.

The top three chapters were selected as Models of Innovation in student, chapter and community development. Students from each chapter were congratulated on stage and presented with a plaque.

NATIONAL WINNER STUDENT DEVELOPMENT

Freeman FFA Chapter, Nebraska

Freeman FFA members participated in a wide variety of projects and events to enhance student development and increase involvement in their new chapter. Members produced and presented agricultural television, newspaper and radio spots. The chapter conducted a Tobacco Free Program demonstrating the damage of tobacco use and the benefits of a healthy lifestyle without tobacco. They also utilized a swine cooperative to enable non-rural members the opportunity to try hands-on animal care.

NATIONAL WINNER CHAPTER DEVELOPMENT

Seneca FFA Chapter, Illinois

The innovative members of the Seneca FFA Chapter coordinated an Agriculture Progress Show for the community to improve public awareness of agricultural education and the FFA. They also hosted the 11th Annual Seneca FFA Toy Show, Sale and Auction, which attracted more than 800 guests. The chapter profited more than $2,500 from the food stand, table rentals and auction commission. In cooperation with their FFA Alumni affiliate, the members added on to their land lab building. The building will house a sale ring, storage area, workshop, restrooms, kitchen and an office costing more than $40,000.

NATIONAL WINNER COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

Garretson FFA Chapter, South Dakota

The Garretson FFA members improved lives of senior citizens in their hometown by constructing hanging plant boxes and filling them with home grown flowers for the assisted living apartments. Their "Safety is Elementary" program provided the opportunity for members to present programs on safety to elementary students with topics ranging from safety on the farm to riding the bus. This division recognized Garretson FFA in their efforts to improve the community's financial health, preserve natural resources, promote citizenship and increase agricultural awareness.

100% states

States with increases in FFA membership include:

Alaska
Arizona
Arkansas
California
Delaware
Georgia
Indiana
Louisiana
Massachusetts
Montana
Nebraska
Nevada
New Jersey
New York
North Carolina
Oregon
Tennessee
Utah
West Virginia
Wyoming

Four states were recognized for having 100% FFA membership: California, North Dakota, Ohio and Oklahoma. This means that every chapter in each of these states has all their students who are enrolled in agricultural education as FFA members.

A successful program will have quality classroom and laboratory instruction, a leadership and recognition component (FFA) and a career preparation segment (supervised agricultural experience). These characteristics make agricultural education stand out from other programs because of the intracurricular nature of the programs and activities offered to students. Students benefit from the instruction they receive while they apply what they have learned to their career choice.

There are hundreds of other chapters in the country who have 100% FFA membership, we pay tribute to you and commend you on a superior job of preparing our youth for tomorrow.

A representative from the Ohio association happily accepts recognition for achieving 100-percent membership, as an Oklahoma representative looks on.

Individuals providing exemplary service to the National FFA Organization received VIP Citations at the 72nd National FFA Convention, Oct. 27-30, including Dr. Clifton Braker of West Fork, AR; Ted Gregg of Chico, CA; A. Charles Fischer of Carmel, IN; Duane Acker of Atlantic, IA; Leon Schumacher of Columbia, MO; John W. Watkins of Marion, OH; Dr. Rosco Vaughn of Lorton, VA; Ken Milholland of Tenino, WA; Gov. Cecil H. Dr. Clifton Braker, a professor at University of Arkansas in West Fork, Ark., served as associate superintendent for the national agricultural mechanics career development event (CDE) for three years prior to his retirement. He had previously served for several years as a judge or contest official for the event, and was highly instrumental in eliciting university students to assist with the CDE.

Merle Bodmer of Waterford, WI, has been active in the national agricultural mechanics career development event (CDE) for the past 12 years, working through the Case Corporation to supply equipment for the event. He served as a consultant in the development of skill activities and has taken an active role in CDE planning.

He retired from his former position as Ohio Agricultural Education Supervisor in 1985.

Ted Gregg of Chico, CA, is a former agricultural consultant and regional supervisor for the California Department of Education in Sacramento. He served as statewide Agricultural Incentive Grant coordinator and writer of the CDE "Blueprint for Excellence." Under Gregg's leadership, California's Superior Region produced 130 American Farmers, 1,910 State Farmers, 92 state proficiency winners, 172 state championship teams and 26 state officers.

A. Charles Fischer of Carmel, IN, president and CEO of Dow AgroSciences, has been a National FFA Executive Sponsor for six years and recently served as chairman of the National FFA Foundation Sponsors' Board. He successfully directed the efforts to raise $7.2 million for the annual campaign and $5.2 million for the capital campaign. He has also served on the FFA Board of Trustees.

Dr. Rosco Vaughn of Lorton, VA served as state supervisor for 20 years and executive director for the National Council for Agricultural Education for the past four years. Previously the state supervisor for New Mexico, Dr. Vaughn helped develop core competencies and a strategic plan for agricultural education while serving as FFA state advisor and chief administrative officer for the New Mexico FFA Association.

Ken Milholland of Tenino, WA, taught agricultural education for more than 30 years before retiring. During his tenure, Milholland worked to encourage participation in poultry science and production throughout the state of Washington. He served as state FFA contest coordinator for 11 years and superintendent for the national prepared public speaking career development event (CDE) for four years.

Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of Charleston, WV, is currently serving his second gubernatorial term. A former FFA member, Underwood has served as chairman of the West Virginia State Advisory Council for Vocational Education.

honorary FFA degrees - FFA supporters

Honorary American FFA Degree recipients exemplify the true meaning of the FFA and its mission with their own way of expressing premier leadership, personal growth and career success. Recipients of this distinguished degree remind members how influential leaders are and the importance of supporting a worthy cause.

Recipients of this degree range from agricultural teachers who devote countless hours helping students to school and government officials who offer their expertise for the good of the organization and the people involved.

The National FFA Organization Honorary American FFA Degree is presented to such individuals to thank them for their continued support of the FFA and agricultural education. During the Friday morning session these honored individuals received their plaques and esteemed appreciation from the national officers.

The Honorary FFA Degree program is designed to honor individuals who have rendered outstanding service to FFA. National FFA President, Lisa Ahrens, presents her parents with the degree.

FFA international programs

Thanks to international programs, students from around the globe are able to enjoy the FFA experience. Highly structured programs for members ages 16 through 24 are offered through the EARTH Tour Seminar, Adventure New Zealand and the Australia Homestay Program as well as many other short-term programs. For older members ages 18 to 24, FFA offers longer-term internship experiences on agriculture operations, in other countries, internship experiences at United States Embassies for the Foreign Agricultural Service of USDA, or opportunities for a one-month experience at EARTH College in Costa Rica.

International awareness increased during convention at the career show's Global Village. Planned activities celebrated 50 years of FFA international programs, including an international dinner, an International Student Exchange Program (ISEP) luncheon for German students enrolled in American FFA, a Toyota teacher session and information program, ethnic dancers and activities like Origami, Japanese name writing and making pinatas.

For more information about FFA international programs, log on to <http://www.ffa.org/international> or call toll-free 1-888-332-7853.

PALS conference

The Partners in Active Learning Support program (PALS) is aimed at pairing FFA members with children in mentoring relationships. Workshops during the convention taught FFA members how to relate to their young friends.

Partners in Active Learning Support (PALS) is a mentoring program matching high school agriculture students with elementary youngsters who have special needs. Developed by the National FFA Organization, the program helps those involved to build trust in others and develop positive self-esteem. Through this program, high school and elementary students explore their interests in plants, animals and the world around them.

The PALS mission is to provide a total, dynamic education system that contributes to personal, academic and career development. The convention focused on mentoring and included FFA members working with more than 700 third-graders. The program was sponsored by the Fifth Third Bank of Kentucky, Electric Cooperatives and The Gheens Foundation, Inc. Kraft Foods also donated lunch to all participants of the PALS convention.

alumni

Going once, going twice, SOLD! This year's alumni auction raised $95,000 for programs sponsored by the alumni association.

FFA alumni reminisced about past national conventions at their annual meeting at the 72nd National FFA convention.

national FFA alumni

The National FFA Alumni Association is an essential component to FFA members and their future. The National FFA Organization's continued success is attributed to the devotion and positive impact of alumni.

This year the alumni conducted their 27th convention encompassing business sessions and award presentations. Their main focus, however, are the live and silent auctions. Last year alumni raised nearly $72,000 at the auction and this year the number topped $95,000.

The alumni were extremely appreciative of the support from Scott County and the state of Kentucky. They welcomed the alumni and FFA members with a helping hand, making the move from Kansas City an easy transition.

This year's auction provided bidders with a vast selection of items, from a 2000 Chevy truck, to a round baler, a livestock trailer and even tickets to the National Finals Rodeo. If the fast-paced ways of the auctioneer were not attendees style, plenty of items were available at the silent auction.

The National FFA Alumni Association is composed of volunteers, including former FFA members, parents and others interested in supporting the FFA. Nationwide, about 45,000 supporters are FFA alumni members.

distinguished service citations

The Distinguished Service Citation was presented at the 72nd National FFA Convention, Oct. 28, to three companies and organizations providing outstanding service and opportunities to the National FFA Organization: Farm Progress Companies, Inc. of Carol Stream, IL; Dow AgroSciences of Indianapolis, IN; and The W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, MI.

For 44 years, Farm Progress has supported the National FFA Foundation, contributing not only financial support, but providing support necessary for its president and publisher, Allan R. Johnson, to serve as chairman of the National FFA Foundation Sponsors' Board. The current publisher of the FFA magazine, FFA New Horizons, which is mailed directly to the more than 450,000 members, Farm Progress has played an integral part in the success of the magazine.

Through 44 years of service, Dow AgroSciences has guided agricultural education and FFA through transition years. In 1996, the company was heavily involved in recruiting the National FFA Center to Indianapolis, offering five acres of land at a reduced cost for its site. In addition, Dow AgroSciences continues as a five-star sponsor after investing $1.3 million dollars in the National FFA Foundation.

The W.K. Kellogg Foundation has made several financial contributions to major agricultural education and FFA projects. The Foundation was the lead contributor to the Project PALS Program, made a contribution to Partners For a Safer Community and was the sponsoring institution for the major initiative Reinventing Agricultural Education (RAE) for the year 2020.

The FFA recognized sponsors for their faithful support of the national organization. Al Johnson, president and publisher of Farm Progress Companies and A. Charles Fischer, president and CEO of Dow AgroSciences, earned the Distinguished Service Citation.

courtesy corps

"Living to serve" takes on a whole new meaning for students working on the courtesy corps. Health and safety concerns, podium removal and guest escorts – you name it and courtesy corps is there. These volunteers help to make national convention a smooth-running show. The pay to these outstanding individuals was nothing more than the sincere gratitude and thanks from the many members and guests they helped serve. National convention would not be the same without their help.

Sponsored by Kosair Children's Hospital and Norton Healthcare

From stuffing envelopes to moving boxes to distributing FFA Today newspapers, courtesy corps members made the convention a success by attending to the details.

business

The Kentucky Fair and Exposition Center was filled with delegates from each state as they worked on pending issues concerning the FFA. The group began sessions two days before convention actually began. They met for hours to draft proposals to be considered by the National FFA Organization board of directors.

Delegates proudly represented their state associations during business meetings. Parliamentary procedure skills were put to work and business was conducted.

The committee on Agricultural Education Trends recommended an alliance between agricultural education and industries to create an understanding by the general public. The Career Success Activities committee recommended the American FFA Degree contain a category for community service. The Membership, Recruitment and Participation committee recommended a national advertising campaign using billboards, the Internet and commercials.

At the close of business Saturday, delegates left Freedom Hall with a sense of accomplishment and purpose, knowing they helped make a difference in the future of FFA.

delegate sessions

Patriotism prevailed at the national FFA convention, students pledged their allegiance to the flag and county at the start of each session.

committee reports

agricultural education trends

We recommend:

Alliance Development

1. Develop media alliances allowing agricultural education and FFA to be seen, heard and read by the general public.
2. Develop promotional pieces to be distributed to school administrators and faculty, parents and other interested parties to illustrate the benefits of agricultural education and FFA.
3. Develop materials for advisors and state officers addressing the do's and don'ts of developing and continuing alliance support.
4. Establish in FFA New Horizons and the FFA web site an alliance recognition page with references to their support.
5. Build alliances with federal officials, including the U.S. President, to build recognition and support for agricultural education and FFA.
6. Create a directory of state representatives from national sponsors.

Technologies and Teaching Strategies

1. Create a partnership with industry sponsorship to provide every agriculture program with computer access (allowing students to experience new technologies such as e-mail, world wide web and power point).
2. Develop a national program to educate teachers on the importance and benefits of teaching students about the new technologies available in agriculture.
3. Create a partnership with National FFA and the agriculture industry to develop a curriculum for an advancement in agriculture technology class for students.
4. Establish a system of updates on new technology to be used by educators to teach students (i.e., CD-ROM, video, newsletters).

Teacher Development

1. That the FFA New Horizons create a section for star agriculture teachers in conjunction with the star student section to give recognition to agricultural educators.
2. That the National FFA Organization develop a "sister school" program, allowing for communication and interaction between chapters and advisors nationwide.
3. That the National FFA Organization update statistics and information about job opportunities available to agricultural education instructors in each state, by contact of all state associations.
4. Develop an interstate agriculture student exchange program following the same structure as the international FFA exchange program.
5. Establish a nationally recognized agriculture program such as "Gold Emblem Chapters" as models for other chapters in that state.
6. Explore the possibility for developing materials for state and local use to improve new teachers and new teaching techniques.
7. Improve promotion of new teacher workshop to state staff and teacher educators.

Agricultural Literacy

1. That the FFA New Horizons run a permanent article featuring information on one or two hot agricultural topics with the FFA web site providing extra information on them.
2. That a task force be set up to explore ways that agricultural aspects can be incorporated into other disciplines.
3. That the National FFA Organization develop a packet consisting of ideas state associations use at large public events (ie: State Fairs and convention) to promote agricultural literacy, and the resources to be utilized at such functions.
4. That the agricultural issue forum be promoted more often to encourage participation; and the Food For America Program be expanded to include grades 6-8, 9-12 and adults.
5. That the National FFA Organization use the media to promote agricultural awareness (for example, TV commercials and world wide web).
6. That the FFA New Horizons be sent to major supporters and administrators.

communications and public relations

We recommend:

Communications Technology and National FFA Online

1. Review and reorganize National FFA Online by audience and interests (i.e., students/teachers/administrators, recruitment, personal stories, specific monitored chat rooms, state associations, applications, scholarships).
2. Simplify state association web addresses and develop links from National FFA Online.
3. Pursue the development of interactive CD-ROM's in the following areas: how to use the internet, how to build a webpage, how to correspond, CDE information, how to build your chapter (i.e., fundraising, activities, etc.).
4. Web page promotion through personalization (i.e., e-mail, web link, state activities).

Media Relations and Public Relations

1. Develop a Chapter Public Relations Guide including: information on key messages, press release formats, examples of correspondence, FFA Week ideas, sample Public Service Announcements, and a list of resources available. Include supplements in FFA New Horizons.
2. Develop online surveys for best practices and ideas relative to public relations. (Publish results in FFA New Horizons.)
3. Design motivational and exciting posters for schools that show a variety of "fun" images of FFA.
4. Seek national co-branding sponsor (i.e., "Proud Sponsor of National FFA" on Papa John's pizza boxes).
5. Evaluate timeliness of current promotional videos and resume distribution of convention highlights.
6. Develop FFA emblems that can be put on community billboards to be offered through the supply service catalog.
7. Provide a link from the web site to AOL for creating chapter homepages.
8. Gear website toward members.
9. Encourage state recognition of exceptional reporters.
10. Include motivational quotes in FFA New Horizons.

Communications Strategies for Member Recruitment, Involvement, and Retention Programs

1. Create links on the web site specifically for recruitment strategies and opportunities.
2. Create a database of members' e-mail addresses by adding a column on the membership rosters for e-mail addresses.
3. Add a place on the membership rosters to indicate chapter presidents so we may target these individuals with recruitment materials.

4. Re-direct posters to non-agricultural students and create videos with exciting, casual dress scenes.
5. Create a web-based e-mail server through www.ffa.org for member e-mail accounts.

National FFA Convention Communications

1. Create a student communications team that will deal with on-site convention information topics like Internet access, news-stand information, event locations, etc.
2. Strategically place television monitors around convention that will broadcast daily agendas and convention highlights. Also have scrolling marquis or kiosks display information.
3. Place informative table tents on food court tables and other places where people congregate. Also place information in strategic locations (i.e., bathroom stalls, local food places, on shuttle buses, etc.). Enhance the guidebook to include information about presenters'/speakers' key points.
4. Provide an incentive program for members who attend different events (i.e., scavenger hunt, verification cards).
5. Create a standard workshop for state officers to present addressing national convention.
6. Try to set up an alliance with Channel-One News to promote and report on the national FFA convention.

Delegates from Texas stand together, even after the grueling hours on the delegate floor. Delegates met Monday through Saturday for business sessions.

We Recommend:

FFA Home Page

- *1. Create a virtual help center, including a virtual assistant, to help the user. Include a pop-up character with voice feed (similar to assistant in Microsoft Office).
2. Create a link to the National FFA's theme songs, including archives of past theme songs. Also, have current theme song play when home page comes up.
3. Implement a national officer tracking link that highlights where the officers are during a certain time. Have voice feeds and pictures highlighting their travels.
4. Remove old links and update links already on the page. Review facts that are currently on the page.
5. Create a link that lets members submit articles to the home page focusing on identified subjects. The articles will be periodically removed.

Handbook

- *1. An index consisting of informational key words should be inserted into the FFA Handbook.
2. Replace the straight blue borders by alternating the color of margins between blue & gold.
3. Cross-check information between the manual and the handbook.
4. Devote one entire page to the National FFA Creed.
5. Place key terms and vocabulary in the margins for easier teaching of important information.

Manual

- *1. Insert an index consisting of informational key words into the FFA Manual.
2. Insert tabs in the manual corresponding with the table of contents applying alternating colors (red, white and black) in order to find information in the manual.
3. Spiral binding the FFA manual would make reading much easier and accessible. In addition to the spiral bound manual, the traditional style manual would also be accessible.
4. Include a drawing or picture in the FFA Manual showing official dress for men and women with detailing lines showing specific features of the uniform.
5. Have an optional official opening/closing ceremonies for the parts of parliamentarian, students advisor, chaplain, and historian in the Official Manual.

New Ideas

- *1. FFA acquires its own computer server with:
  - A. Links from national, state and chapter home pages
  - B. Attaching web page to certain search engines
  - C. Links to agricultural education technology
  - D. Create database management system
2. Improve professional appearance of FFA New Horizons
  - A. Broadening advertisement base
  - B. Creating a section for each age group
  - C. Creating a calendar of events on the national level
  - D. Referencing links in FFA New Horizons for specific topics
3. Spiral-Bind Official Manuals that have tabs and are larger in size.
4. Personalize home page and create a memory of previous visits to the site by personal e-mail address.
5. Put the Official Manual on the home page.
6. Create partnership with other school clubs for help on chapter or local home page.
  - A. Updating
  - B. General Maintenance

FFA New Horizons

- *1. FFA New Horizons implement a bolder, more mature and informative magazine cover that will be attractive to members through photo covers and visual structure through article previews.
2. An electronic version of FFA New Horizons be made readily available, providing opportunities available to members, links to other state inserts, a preview page of what is to come in upcoming issues, an overview of past and current issues of interactions – all in an easily navigable web site.
3. A page or half-page be established that provides members with links to Internet sites on various topics from scholarships, special interests, agricultural facts, associations/chapter links, and people/groups.
4. FFA New Horizons periodically insert business reply cards with information on upcoming opportunities and events on the national level that members may want to receive more information on.
5. A career sketch should be provided in each issue that highlights a specific career with a past member who has excelled in their field of interest or career choice.
6. FFA New Horizons cover a broader spectrum of articles that will allow urban members to relate.
7. FFA New Horizons develop a national cover design search.
8. FFA New Horizons feature a profile article of a past national officer 10, 15, or 20 years down the road, looking into their lives, families and what social developments they may have been involved with over the years.
9. Include a quote, trivia question, joke, etc., on each page.
10. FFA New Horizons develop an evaluation form to insert for member responses.
11. FFA New Horizons look into new fresh advertisements that appeal to different groups.
12. Provide all national officers' e-mail addresses for the members on the national officer Q&A page.

leadership and personal development

We recommend:

Technology Implementation

- *1. Develop a grant program and application process to ensure that the chapters who truly need technology have an equal chance of obtaining it through a partnership with sponsors (starting at the state level and ending at the national level).
2. Encourage the National FFA Organization to develop a technology task force to reach a broader spectrum of FFA members in order to utilize current and forthcoming technology.
3. Encourage national staff to promote the production of promotional videos relating to different divisions (i.e. area, district, region, section, etc.) at NLC SO or BLAST Off.

Program Refurbishment and Development

1. The state officer continuum to include more detailed recruitment and fundraising ideas from all associations and present them to state officers and chapters.
- *2. National convention student workshops should be developed that will increase the awareness of FFA international programs and newly developed FFA leadership programs.
3. Use the state officer continuum to implement new ideas and techniques for working with younger FFA members.
4. That Advanced Leadership Development (ALD) program include an area involving the utilization of leadership skills developed at previous levels.

Leadership Programs Promotion

1. Have better utilization of web page and FFA New Horizons for promotional purposes, for programs such as Experiencing Discovery, Growth and Excellence (EDGE), Made for Excellence (MFE), Advanced Leadership Development (ALD) and Washington Leadership Conference (WLC) by including dates and places of these programs for all states and the purpose of program.
- *2. Create an exhibit to highlight FFA leadership programs at national and state conventions.
3. Declare a "Greenhand Day" and use it to enrich greenhands' knowledge of advanced opportunity levels in the FFA.

committee reports

Program Evaluation

- *1. Traditional evaluation by number or scantron evaluations be replaced with more creative evaluation methods (e.g., begin a conference with skits regarding expectations, followed by another skit at the end of the conference where students demonstrate what they have learned). A suggestion box to provide a forum for comments regarding the conference.
2. Evaluations should be relevant to the conference, conference theme and the age group of the participants involved.
3. Evaluations should be sought periodically throughout the conference, instead of one overall evaluation submitted at the end of the conference only.

national FFA convention

We recommend:

Experience and Impact

- *1. Create an entertainment brochure or poster that highlights local attractions such as concerts, shopping malls, amusement parks, restaurants and the career fair to send directly to school and agricultural advisors to publicize all possible activities.
2. Send promotional videos to state associations highlighting convention experiences such as a day in the life of a FFA member at national convention
3. Have members submit positive personal experiences to FFA New Horizons magazine, stating their own personal experiences or snapshots of their trip.
4. Make members more aware of workshops and activities at convention through commercials, posters and flyers. These methods should state the date, time, presenter and main focus of the workshop or activity.

Membership

- *1. Create a day conference within the convention for younger members.
2. Provide video and information packet to distribute to chapters.
3. Offer national convention survey online with raffle prizes.
4. Provide a game area to focus on agricultural trivia during down time (i.e. chapter feuds, Wheel of Fortune).
5. Create a scavenger hunt with prizes to incorporate all aspects of national convention.
6. Provide international food court to promote diversity.
7. Provide workshops dealing with regional diversity.

committee reports

Convention Review

- *1. Provide more private and professional facilities for CDE's (i.e. noise level and preparation area).
2. Contain convention activities such as interviews within the convention area (i.e. Executive Inn and Executive West Hotels).
3. Create and send by mail a CDE-specific survey to send to advisors of all CDE participants, focusing on privacy, facilities, flow of contest and location.
4. Create a separate entrance to convention hall for delegates, advisors and VIPs.
5. Increase shuttle service for all hotels to convention facilities.
6. Create off-area walkways to increase after hour security of FFA shopping mall and career show.
7. Examine, and if necessary, reconstruct configuration of food court and shopping mall to utilize unoccupied space to fullest potential.
8. Establish "FFA Lighting Up Louisville" as a tradition (i.e. fireworks).
9. Analyze state and delegate photo quality and change if needed.
10. Develop ideas to commend Louisville for hosting the national FFA convention.

Activities in Action

- *1. To provide training and incentives (i.e. dinner, t-shirts, and award programs) to increase the quantity and quality to Courtesy Corps, due to the concern of short staffing and enforcement of FFA members code of conduct and official dress at all sessions.
2. Create a supplement of the national convention guidebook called The Yellow Pages of Louisville for FFA members, which should include climate, places of interests, malls, restaurants, hotels, parks, etc.
3. Posters at hotels' doors with convention schedule.
4. To improve information given in FFA New Horizons and on the web page, concerning national convention and community activities (i.e. actual photos and maps of the city).
5. Provide informal time to mingle with national officers.
6. Continue the John Deere shuttles.

It's always hard to say good-bye ...
But these students have acquired memories and FFA friendships to last a lifetime.
