GRADUATE, PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS SAY PASS-FAIL MOSTLY FAILS

In a recent informal survey, graduate and professional schools of the Committee on Institutional Co-operation (CIC) expressed concern with the growing practice of nontraditional grading, viewing it as potentially prejudicial to applicants' chances for admissions.

Most CIC medical school admissions officers agree that pass-fail grades on an applicant's transcript force over-reliance on the Medical College Admissions Test. Substantial numbers of such grades can produce a "distinct disadvantage" for the applicant, according to one admissions officer. Another termed pass-no record grading "grossly unfair" to good students.

Business and law schools see lesser problems with nontraditional grading so long as it constitutes fewer than one in four of the grades submitted, although they agree with their medical school colleagues that substantial pass-fail grading forces over-reliance on standard admissions tests (the Admissions Test for Graduate Schools of Business and the Law School Admissions Test).

Since financial aid for students of law, medicine and business is granted primarily on the basis of need, unconventional transcripts -- once the admission hurdle is passed -- have no impact on the student's pocketbook. CIC graduate schools, however, weigh the student's academic record in determining his eligibility for aid, and a transcript heavy with pass-fail or pass-no record grades can penalize the student financially.

CIC graduate schools are especially condemnatory of pass-no record grades, one school describing it as "bordering on the fraudulent." (CIC members are the Big Ten universities plus the University of Chicago.)

Speaking of calendars, the Information Services Office urgently needs your events which are planned for next year.

Numerous requests are coming in from students, faculty and outside organizations wishing for complete calendars for the 1973-74 academic year. Official university publications now being prepared also need your schedules. Some groups need to know of your event so they can schedule theirs without conflict.

Schools, departments and organizations which have planned events -- convocations, seminars, special lectures and programs -- are asked to send dates, times and places to Information Services, 38th Street Campus. If your tentative programs are about 90 per cent set, include them with a notation that they may change. It might be best not to include an event which is still pretty doubtful, or only a dream at this time.

ENROLLMENT

Enrollment for the first summer session is up -- fall is behind. There are 5,793 students attending classes which gives IUPUI the largest student body in the I.U. system this summer.

The 22 per cent increase in students and 13 per cent increase in credit hours has registration officials happy but puzzled. Registrar Neil Lantz is at a loss to explain why enrollment is so high. He said that students may plan to attend Summer Session I and take a vacation during Summer Session II. It may be that since more colleges are adopting early calendars similar to IUPUI, more transfer students are free to attend the first term. That's the good news now the bad news. Admissions Director John Krivacs says that fall admissions so far are running about 8 per cent behind this time last year. To date, 2,051 new students have been admitted for the fall. . .169 are veterans. . .not a great influx, but numbers are growing slowly.

Krivacs' figures show that 100 more women than men have been admitted which may have an affect on fields usually dominated by men -- the technology areas. This is down 21 per cent for fall compared to last year at this time. Engineering enrollment is about equal to that of last year.

Krivacs notes that enrollment in the new School of Science is 85 per cent ahead of last year. Students enter that school directly now, rather than go through the University Division. The two-year nursing program is closed for 1973 with 126 new students - 9 per cent less than last year. A ceiling was imposed because of facilities.
