WHERE IMPACT IS MADE

There's distinction here. So prominent, you applaud it.

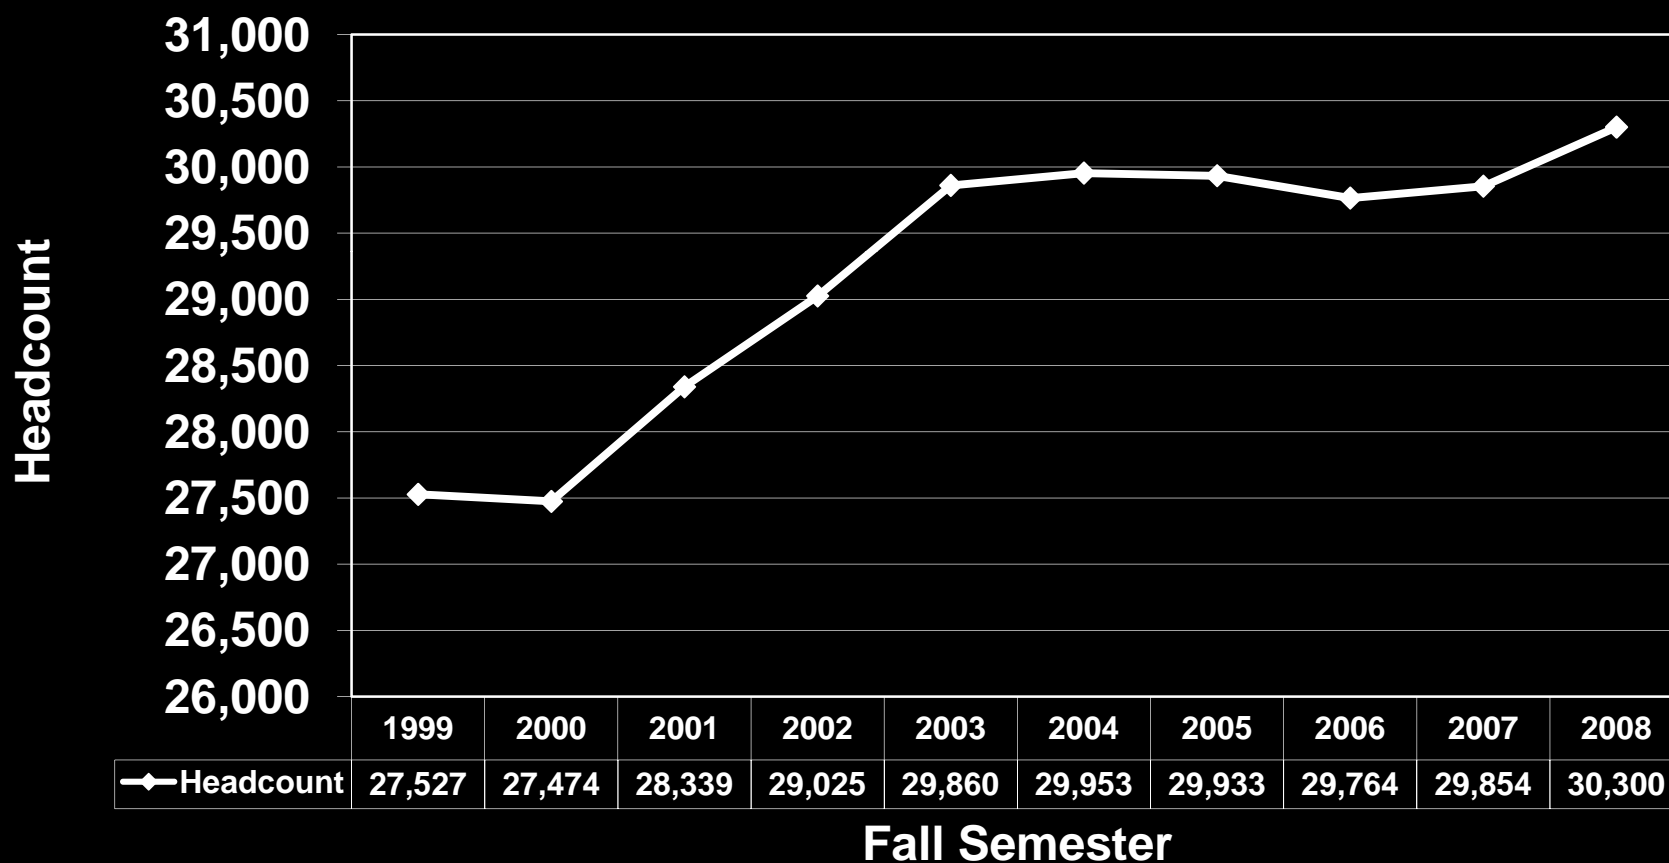

As a Wayne Township school principal, Nicole Law considers it her job to help her Garden City Elementary students confront challenges and pursue their dreams — and that's a subject Nicole knows quite a bit about.

Throughout her life, the former IUPUI student and IU School of Education graduate has battled Sickle Cell Anemia, a painful genetic disease. But Nicole's determination and dedication in battling the disease — her personal "no-excuse" credo — has helped her build an atmosphere of achievement for Garden City students, many of whom must overcome the challenges of a life of poverty. The impact of her work and that of her staff recently earned Nicole the prestigious 2008 Milken National Educator Award — nicknamed the "Oscars of Teaching" — making her one of an elite group of educators that are helping shape the academic future of America.

Translating Research into Practice

Chancellor
Charles R. Bantz

As Chancellor since 2003, I have observed that IUPUI faculty are conducting important research and making significant contributions to improving all aspects of people's lives. Their research mission demonstrates the value of generating knowledge and taking that knowledge where it can be used to make lives better. Such scholars Translate Research Into Practice.

To celebrate these faculty researchers and the impact they have, I am launching the IUPUI TRIP initiative. I have asked Professor Sandra Petronio to spearhead the initiative and Steve Viehweg to serve as managing director. This initiative will both identify IUPUI's translational scholars and recognize their work in several programs soon to be underway. We are excited about the potential to bring local and national attention to the great work our faculty are doing on the campus of IUPUI.

Master planners map vision for IUPUI's next decade

Six easels scribbled with hopes and goals for IUPUI stood out April 3 in the Campus Center food court as David King and his Master Planners searched for any input from students, faculty and staff on what would better the campus and surrounding city in the near future.

Michael A. McRobbie, Indiana University president, laid out a vision last fall to create a Master Plan for both the Bloomington and Indianapolis campuses and initiated a search for who would best be able to make transformations to the schools.

After interviewing more than 40 design groups, McRobbie discovered the JJR, also known as the Smith Group, and hired nationally renowned chairman David King to lead IUPUI's own architectural extreme makeover. But unlike the television show, there will be no time for a trip to Disneyland. King says the work starts right now.
