

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF INDIANAPOLIS

Presented by the POLIS Research Center
at
Indiana University-
Purdue University
at Indianapolis

Spring 1993

Volume 2 • Number 3

A City of Neighborhoods

Indianapolis prides itself on being a city of neighborhoods. But newcomers often find it difficult to recognize these neighborhoods because the city lacks the ethnic divisions seen in Chicago or the physical boundaries important in Pittsburgh or Cincinnati.

How has Indianapolis defined its neighborhoods? Here, the definition of neighborhoods stems from historic patterns of settlement, the development of speculative housing, and the incorporation of previously independent communities into the expanding city.

Alexander Ralston's 1821 plan for the new state capital assumed that future growth could be accommodated in an area of one square mile. However, settlement quickly expanded beyond the city's original boundaries to outlying villages such as Allisonville, Millersville, West Newton, Southport, Stringtown, Cumberland, Bridgeport, and Augusta.

Throughout the city's history, transportation improvements stimulated urban growth and created new neighborhoods. Canal construction in the 1830s led to the establishment of Broad Ripple on the north and an industrial district on the near westside which became the home for many African American citizens. The growth of railroads after 1847 prompted the establishment of neighborhoods of industrial workers contiguous to the Mile Square, including Brightwood, Martindale, Irish Hill, and Haughville. By the 1850s, railroad depots anchored new towns such as Castleton, Lawrence, Oaklandon, and New Augusta. As late as 1906, entrepreneurs established the industrial town of Beech Grove around the repair yards of the New York Central.

The introduction of mule-drawn streetcars after 1864 brought the suburban ideal to Indianapolis in planned developments such as Irvington, Woodruff Place, and Mapleton.

Curvilinear streets and sweeping lawns contrasted the rurality of suburban life with the industrializing city. By the turn of the century, electric streetcars and interurban railroads carried commuters farther from the Mile Square to semi-rural outposts such as Warfleigh, Ravenswood, Fairview, and Broad Ripple on the north side or University Heights and Edgewood to the south.

First introduced at the turn of the century as an expensive novelty, the automobile allowed wealthy citizens to motor to Brendonwood, Golden Hill, Crows Nest, and Woodstock, exclusive areas on the highlands overlooking White River and Fall Creek. The growth of the automobile industry, centered locally in the town of Speedway (platted in 1912), increased the affordability of vehicles. By the 1920s, many middle-class residents regularly commuted by car to Forest Manor, Warren Park, Emerson Heights, and Tuxedo Heights or to northern suburbs now known as the Meridian-Kessler and Butler-Tarkington neighborhoods.

With the exception of affluent suburbs such as Meridian Hills and Williams Creek and public projects like Lockefield Gardens, economic depression and wartime shortages impeded growth during the 1930s and 1940s. But the end of World War II brought the GI Bill and federal highway funds. A new suburban boom occurred when completion of highway I-465 in 1970 transformed Indianapolis into an eight-county metropolitan region.

The outward growth of Indianapolis was accompanied by deterioration in the old city. Since 1950, over 155,000 residents moved out of Center Township. Construction of the IUPUI campus and the I-65/I-70 inner loop displaced additional residential neighborhoods. Beginning with Lockerbie Square in the

Continued inside

Cavanaugh Hall, 301 • 425 University Boulevard
Indianapolis, IN 46202-5140 • 317.274.2455

Director's Notes

Four years ago, the Encyclopedia of Indianapolis project was little more than an ambitious dream. It boasted one staff member, a small office, and an important commitment from Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis. Today, the Encyclopedia is within eighteen months of publication—if there is sufficient funding to complete the project on time.

The community's support of the Encyclopedia has been both encouraging and disappointing. First, the good news. Over 400 writers from Indianapolis and elsewhere are preparing articles for the volume. Almost half that number have waived the modest stipend we offer. More than twenty experts have assumed the additional role of contributing editor, a role that requires extensive knowledge of the topic and a willingness to identify and enlist qualified authors. Most writers and editors are from Indianapolis, making the project truly community-based. Without their leadership and support, the Encyclopedia would still be a dream — or a nightmare.

The most disappointing news is that the Indianapolis community has not supported the project financially. Even though we ask the community only to match the funds raised independently by POLIS, and although the proposed contribution is barely one-quarter of the project's total budget, the community has given only $104,000 toward its goal of $417,000.

Producing an 800-page comprehensive reference work is expensive, made more so by the absence of a written record of the city's history. Is the $1.45 million investment worth it? People outside Indianapolis think so. The National Endowment for the Humanities awarded the project a $98,000 challenge grant because

Neighborhoods — from page 1

1960s, historic preservation efforts successfully revitalized several downtown neighborhoods. However, some citizens criticized historic preservation for replacing lower income, largely minority residents with middle-class “gentrifiers.”

The passage of Unigov in 1970 expanded the borders of Indianapolis to Marion County, encompassing many towns which had been independent. The cities of Beech Grove, Lawrence, Southport, and Speedway were excluded from city-county consolidation and remained self-governing municipalities.

Neighborhood associations became important in the 1980s; by 1990, over two hundred neighborhood organizations existed. Community development corporations such as Eastside Community Investments (ECI) have played important roles in addressing issues involving experts from across the country advised that the encyclopedia—and the related projects undertaken by POLIS—was “clearly having the benefit of turning Indianapolis from a relatively unexamined place into a center for urban studies.”

But what about benefits other than academic ones? From civic education to corporate recruiting, the Encyclopedia will pay rich dividends to Indianapolis. The experience of Cleveland, Ohio, the first city to produce a modern encyclopedia, suggests that the volume will serve needs and find uses that no one can now predict. New York City believes its volume, also scheduled for a 1994 publication, will have this benefit. So does Atlanta, which will use its volume in conjunction with the 1996 Olympics to promote itself to the world. And what about other, less market-oriented rewards? Surely it will mean much to the future of this city to have our children learn the lessons of urban life from the experience of Indianapolis rather than from Chicago, New York, or Los Angeles, the examples most commonly found in school texts.

The Encyclopedia of Indianapolis project is in its final eighteen months. It has followed an ambitious schedule and, unlike other complex projects elsewhere, has met every deadline to date. For this progress to continue, it is vital that the community commit an additional $300,000 to this effort. No amount is too small, no contact or request for funds too insignificant. Your gift can also be pledged now for future payment. The project needs your financial contribution. It also needs you to enlist others to make an investment in the future of Indianapolis. If you will help, give us a call at 274-2455. ■ housing and economic development. Many neighborhood organizations, however, languished in the wake of the downtown development which dominated the 1980s.

The 1991 mayoral election highlighted the importance of neighborhoods as political and cultural issues. Political leaders must confront historically derived definitions of neighborhoods in Indianapolis if they are to implement a system of municipal federalism. Other citizens, seeking smaller, more comprehensible communities within the larger metropolis, explore the heritage and culture of their neighborhoods as a tool for building community. Whatever the reason, Indianapolis, known in the nineteenth century as a “city of homes,” is rapidly becoming a “city of neighborhoods.” ■

Meet the Contributing Editor — Neighborhoods, Suburbs, Cities, and Towns

Lamont Hulse, senior associate at POLIS Research Center, serves as the contributing editor for Neighborhoods, Suburbs, Cities and Towns. Hulse holds a bachelor's degree from DePauw University and a master's in history from the University of Delaware, where he was a Hagley Fellow. He is the author of several publications, including A Century of Service: The West End Neighborhood House and Taking Fund Raising Seriously (edited with Dwight Burlingame). Most recently he co-authored The Main Stem: The History & Architecture of North Meridian Street (with David J. Bodenhamer and Elizabeth B. Monroe). Before joining the POLIS staff, Hulse interpreted history and material culture for Conner Prairie Pioneer Settlement and was associated with museums in Delaware and West Virginia. With POLIS, he initiated research into the suburbanization of Indianapolis and managed research projects for Goodwill Industries of Central Indiana, the Association of Indiana Museums, and St. Alban's Episcopal Church.

As contributing editor, Hulse has identified a variety of essays and general entries that will examine the development of Indianapolis neighborhoods. Over two hundred neighborhoods have registered with the city of Indianapolis. Space will not allow entries on each one. However, longer essays will discuss the growth of communities in the nine townships in Marion County, as well as the seven surrounding counties. Other essays will address significant interpretive themes, including historic preservation, neighborhood organizations, and downtown development. ■

Encyclopedia of Indianapolis Staff

David J. BodenhamerDirector, POLIS Research Center & Editor-in-Chief

Robert G. BarrowsManaging Editor

David G. VanderstelAssistant Editor

Lamont J. HulseSenior Associate

Deborah MarkisohnResearcher

Marcia PilonAdministrative Assistant

Barbara WaldsmithEditorial Assistant

Cathleen DonnellyNewsletter Editor

Joan Cunningham, Jeffrey Duvall, Michelle Hale, Stacey Nicholas, Connie Zeigler, Research Assistants

SUPPORT THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF INDIANAPOLIS!

YES, I want to contribute in the neighborhood of:

☐ $500 ☐ $250 ☐ $100 ☐ Other $ _____

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

You may also pledge your support for future payment. Please make checks payable to the Indiana University Foundation and return to:

Encyclopedia of Indianapolis
Cavanaugh Hall 301
425 University Boulevard
Indianapolis, Indiana 46202
317.274.2455

Neighborhoods, Suburbs, Cities, and Towns - Approved Entries to Date

Mini-Essays

Annexation	Homecroft
Downtown Development	Indian Lake
Historic Preservation	Irish Hill
Neighborhood Associations	Irvington
Public Housing	Johnson County
	Johnson's Woods
	Julietta
	Lawrence
	Lawrence Township
	Lockerbie Square
	Lynnhurst
	Mapleton-Fall Creek
	Mars Hill
	Martindale
	Maywood
	Meadows
	Meridian Hills
	Meridian Kessler
	Midtown/Indiana Ave. District
	Millersville
	Morgan County
	New Augusta
	Nora
	North Indianapolis
	North Meridian St. Corridor
	Northwest (United)
	Oaklandon
	Old Northside
	Perry Township
	Pike Township
	Plainfield
	Ransom Place
	Ravenswood
	Rocky Ripple
	Shelby County
	Southport
	Speedway
	Spring Hill
	St. Joseph
	Stringtown
	The Valley
	Traders Point
	University Heights
	Wanamaker
	Warren Park
	Warren Township
	Washington Township
	Wayne Township
	West Indianapolis
	West Newton
	Wholesale District
	Williams Creek
	Woodruff Place
	Wynnedale
	Zionsville

Timeline

Neighborhoods and Communities in Indianapolis

- 1821 The Mile Square platted.
- 1828 Quaker settlers established Eastern Meeting now known as West Newton, on Goose Creek.
- 1829 First settlement in Pike Township, Augusta, founded by George Cole, Sr. and Jonathon Ingo.
- 1830 Cumberland Hall built and immediately attracted a cluster of houses. Original settlers were laborers who had worked on the road.
- 1830 In Wayne Township, Bridgeport platted at the site of a toll house on the National Road. Named for a bridge that spanned Lick Creek.
- 1836 Mount Pleasant settled.
- 1838 Village of Brubaker's Mill, later known as Millersville, founded.
- 1849 Clermont platted on the old Ezra Meeker Trail. On the southside, the new town of Southport developed.
- 1852 Castleton, named for a town in North Carolina, platted by Thomas Gentry. First known by two names, Hosbrook and Augusta Station, New Augusta began as a railroad depot. On the south side, the town of Acton platted. Originally known as Farmersville, the name later changed to honor a resident, General Acton.
- 1853 Part of Calvin Fletcher's farm, Wood Lawn, sold for residential development. The name, Fletcher Place, first used in 1872.
- 1866 Marion County Commissioners officially changed the name of Lanesville to Lawrence.
- 1870 -72 Brookside and Oak Hill suburbs platted by Albert E. Fletcher.
- 1871 To the north of Indianapolis, Peter Lawson named his post office Nora, after his hometown in Sweden.
- 1872 Brightwood and Malott Park founded. James O. Woodruff laid out Woodruff Place, intending to create an exclusive suburban town.
- 1873 Jacob Julian and Sylvester Johnson platted Irvington as a new suburb for "people of culture."
- 1875 Haugh and Company moved iron works to Michigan St., west of White River. Workers settled in the area, later known as Haughville.
- 1884 Villages of Wellington & Broad Ripple incorporated as Broad Ripple.
- 1890 Camby platted. Formerly called West Union Station. New state fairgrounds were established at Maple Road (38th Street) and old location purchased and platted for residential lots, now known as Herron-Morton Place.
- 1902 William L. Elder platted a new addition on the southside to be named University Heights. Profits from lot sales were to be used to establish Indiana Central University (now the University of Indianapolis).
- 1906 Beech Grove founded with plans to build a locomotive repair shop.
- 1907 William Elder platted Edgewood as Stop 7 on the interurban route.
- 1910 Ravenswood and Rocky Ripple developed as summer resort communities.
- 1911 The Greater Indianapolis Industrial Association formed to create Mars Hill, a new city of factories and workers.
- 1912 Speedway City platted as a local center for automobile production. The new city was built around the racetrack used to test automotive components.
- 1913 Town of Warren Park platted.
- 1920 Citizens of New Bethel obtained post office and changed name to Wanamaker, after U.S. Postmaster General.
- 1921 Wealthy Indianapolis families began to build secluded estates in Crows Nest.
- 1922 Benjamin Stevenson developed his family's farm as a residential area and named it Forest Hills.
- 1923 Homecroft platted.
- 1925 Washington Bank & Trust Company developed northside community of Williams Creek.
- 1935 Over 300 houses demolished to make room for Lockefield Gardens.
- 1937 To block construction of a nearby drive-in restaurant, neighbors voted to incorporate as the town of Meridian Hills.
- 1939 Small westside community of Wynnedale incorporated.
- 1953 Meadows area underwent housing boom. Butler-Tarkington Neighborhood Organization established to promote stability in an area undergoing racial change.
- 1962 A portion of the proposed I-465 expressway opened in the northwest corner of Marion County. The "outer loop," completed in 1970, encouraged residential development along the county's outer perimeter.
- 1970 Under Unigov, city and county governments consolidated, extending all borders to the county line.
- 1976 Opening of I-70/I-65 inner loop connected outlying suburbs to downtown and displaced established Center Township neighborhoods. Eastside Community Investments, Inc. (ECI) founded and becomes the first operating Community Development Corporation (CDC) in the city.
- 1980 The City of Indianapolis, in cooperation with the Greater Indianapolis Progress Commission (GIPC), publishes the Regional Center Plan which sets agenda for a decade of downtown revitalization.
- 1988 Indianapolis Neighborhood Housing Partnership founded to improve the economic and physical infrastructure of neighborhoods in Center Township.
- 1991 Regional Center Plan II published to "breathe new life into the center city as a neighborhood."

38N14K2a

Urban Agenda: IUPUI on the Circle

The POLIS Research Center and the School of Liberal Arts at IUPUI continue a series of public discussions on important urban issues currently affecting Indianapolis.

These lunchtime discussions are hosted with the cooperation of the Associated Group in their headquarters at 120 Monument Circle, Conference Room A. This central location is easily accessible to downtown workers who may bring a brown bag lunch to the presentation. All discussions are presented free of charge. Coffee and tea will be provided.

All presentations are scheduled from 12:00 to 1:00 p.m.

Wednesday, April 14, 1993

"Indianapolis from a Religious Perspective."

James Divita, Professor of History, Marion College and President, Indiana Religious History Association.

Jan Shipps, Professor of History, Religious Studies, and American Studies

David Bodenhamer, Professor of History and Director, POLIS Research Center

Wednesday, May 12, 1993

"Indianapolis During the Hudnut Years: An Appraisal"

Mark Rosentraub, Associate Dean, Indiana University School of Public and Environmental Affairs and Director, Center for Urban Policy and the Environment, IUPUI

Comments by William H. Hudnut, III, Senior Fellow, Hudson Institute

Wednesday, June 2, 1993

"Amusement Parks in Indianapolis"

David Vanderstel, Assistant Editor,
Encyclopedia of Indianapolis

Connie Ziegler, Research Assistant, POLIS Research Center, IUPUI

For more information on this series, contact Lamont Hulse at (317) 274-2458.

Encyclopedia of Indianapolis
Cavanaugh Hall, 301
425 University Boulevard
Indianapolis, Indiana 46202-5140

NON-PROFIT ORG.
U.S.
POSTAGE
PAID
PERMIT #4245
Indianapolis, IN