

NEWSBRIEFS

Linguistics for Languages

A new course is being offered by the School of Liberal Arts this spring. SLA 300: Linguistics for Language Students is the first course of its kind to be offered at IUPUI.

Using a variety of languages from around the world, the course will examine the complexities, similarities and differences of human language.

Professor Lawrence Carpenter said, "The course is designed to give students an awareness of how language works."

The course is open to all students of language and anthropology and is designed to improve practical skills and knowledge for learning foreign languages, for analyzing the role of language in society and for interpreting the relationships between language and culture.

Carpenter said, "Language is something everyone takes for granted and doesn't realize how complex it is."

Library Corner

by Barbara B. Fischler
Director University Libraries

The orientation of the Sagamore provides some basic information about the IUPUI University Libraries. As a core organization of our campuses, we are continually trying to improve our services and to add important new materials to the collections.

Through this column we shall be informing you about how each of our units can assist you with your research for classes, careers, leisure pursuits - just about anything you can name.

We'll inform you about areas and services such as government documents, SEARCH, special indexes, learning to use the libraries, and important new books. If there is a particular matter which you wish to have discussed, please let us know. Bring your requests to: Barbara B. Fischler, Director, University Libraries, 815 West Michigan St. IUPUI Campus.
Special Note:

We are going to sponsor a photographic contest soon. Our local winners will become eligible for the American Library Association (ALA) National Contest with results being announced in July, 1985 in Chicago. Watch for the theme and rules and get your camera ready!

Energy conservation

IUPUI is saving $285,000 a year in heating costs by keeping 2,000 steam traps on the campus in good working order.

Stream traps that don't work properly waste energy and money. A trained four-man crew uses a $600 ultrasound probe to detect traps, which they then fix or replace.

The Physical Plant department was the source of the idea, which took first-place honors in a national cost-reduction competition among colleges and universities.

Continuing Registration

All students enrolled at IUPUI during the Fall Semester 1984 and all newly admitted students are scheduled to register during Continuing Registration. Students should be receiving an appointment card in the mail with the scheduled time to register. People who have not received an appointment card or are a returning student, contact the Office of the Registrar to obtain an appointment to register. Before Nov. 5, call 264-4916. After Nov. 5, call 264-2782.

Campus favors Reagan, Orr

Students examine issues

By Steve Hammer
Staff Writer

In the 1960s, college campuses were the hotbeds of rebellion.

Student groups such as SD6 were sprouting on campuses nationwide. These students supported underdog candidates like Sen. Eugene McCarthy and Dick Gregory while Nixon said a "silent majority" supported his policies.

Sixteen years later, many students no longer are supporting the underdogs. On the IUPUI campus, a majority of the approximately 100 students surveyed support President Ronald Reagan for re-election.

The unscientific survey also showed that Gov. Robert Orr is supported by more students than Democratic candidate Wayne Townsend. The reason for the apparent GOP leanings by students are varied.

When asked what they thought the most important issues were, over half the students said the economy was the overriding issue. These students, for the most part, support Reagan and Orr.

Graduate student Tim Latimer said "Reagan's record speaks for itself." He also said that the incumbent Orr is more qualified than Townsend.

"Orr has experience," he said.

Many of the students surveyed were reluctant to give their names for publication. One such student said he wouldn't vote to re-elect Reagan.

"I didn't vote for the guy in the first place," he said. "He cut off my social security."

Although a definite minority, the supporters of Democratic presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale were vociferous. "National security is a big issue," said Mark Harris. "I don't think Reagan's platform is solid on this issue."

Many of the students surveyed had no opinion on the gubernatorial race, saying that they did not have enough information on which to base their opinion.

One student, who requested that her name not be used, said Gov. Orr's famous "rock video" commercial offended her.

"He must think we're patsies," she said. "Imagine using a video instead of issues in the campaign."

Drawings by Lois Neathery

Townsend's support was based partially, according to the survey, on the strength of Ann Delaney, Townsend's running mate. "Delaney has intelligence," one student said. "She would perform her job well."

The controversial Indiana license branch system was cited by many Townsend supporters as one of the main issues. Many also mentioned public utility reform. Townsend has stressed both of these in his campaign.

In other issues, a majority of the students do not support a nuclear freeze. The few that did, not surprisingly, lean towards Mondale. He has stressed the need for a bilateral nuclear freeze.

Despite the many polls taken, only one will count.

Price for shopping around

Cheating yourself

By Joyce K. Jensen

There is a marked tendency among most students at IUPUI (and presumably, by projection, other universities) to shop around for easy classes and undemanding professors.

I have yet to be in a class where a few people didn't take a kind of free, trial sample by coming to the first couple of lectures to see what was going to be required, then drop out when it looked as if they were going to have to put in some real work.

Of course there are legitimate reasons for dropping out, although we don't have room to enumerate here. We don't condemn the practice wholesale.

We are also not diametrically opposed to classes which don't demand inhuman workloads, and we don't pound the professor's desk demanding more tests and term papers when we find ourselves in such a class.

Still, there remains the question of whether you enrolled in college to learn something or not. And if you are here to learn, does it not behoove you to learn as much as you reasonably can?

A friend who's done well in his career told me that he succeeded in college by treating each subject as if it were his major. He graduated more than twenty years ago and he's never regretted the work he put in while in college.

The professor from which he learned the most was also the most demanding. Her classes were never easy, but he took as many courses from her as he could because of what he learned. To this day he quotes her.

In a recent editorial in these pages, Dr. Brian O'Connor made a good case for a diversified education, even for the specialist. Our contention here is not only that such diversification is worthwhile, but that you are doing yourself a favor if you put some real work in on all your subjects, even those not in your major area.

A corollary to this go-for-the-easy syndrome is the it's-all-the-professor's-fault complaint. For every D student who decides to try harder next time, there seem to be three or four others who blame everyone for the poor grade except himself.

Yes, Virginia, there are unfair professors out there, but the fact is, if you get a bad grade in a course, there's a good possibility that it's your own fault.

And my experience at this university demonstrates that there's an equally good possibility that the professor isn't sitting in his or her office cackling with glee over your poor grade, but has given you his or her office hours and phone number out of a readiness and willingness to help you do better.

If you hear that a movie, book, or restaurant is mediocre, you don't waste your time and money on it. Why, then, deliberately choose a mediocre education?

The key is, of course, you.

A FEMINIST VIEW

Administration highlights

By Julia Joy

With the election so close, I've pulled a few highlights from our library's Files of Facts for your consideration. This is for all you students under 25 who may be too young to have formed a healthy skepticism during the Nixon era toward the presidential gap between words and deeds. And it's for all of you over 25 who may not remember the past four years too clearly. I'm sure that at least one of Reagan's actions has had a direct impact on your life.

Choice of staff: Secretaries James Watt, Alexander Haig and Raymond Donovan; Richard Allen and Anne Burford. All resigned amid controversy and/or federal investigation. David Stockman, who offered to resign after his candor about Reagan's economic policies. William French Smith, who should have resigned over $50,000 from a steel mill.

Economic policies: Reagan: 1) promised to cut taxes—he did; to cut government spending—he slashed human need programs and raised the defense budget from 24% to 32.4% of the total budget; and to balance the budget—he totally ignored this one. The 1982 deficit ballooned to $180 billion and kept on going. 2) decontrolled oil prices, increasing gas prices by 10% per gallon and oil profits by 29%. 3) proposed on Thanksgiving 1982, during the peak of unemployment, a tax on unemployment compensation to motivate the unemployed to get jobs. 4) laid off-the-record that it was hard to justify the corporate income tax and it should be replaced with personal income tax for stockholders.

Social policies: Reagan: 1) proposed the end of federal participation in food stamp, school lunch, postal service, arts/humanities and many foreign aid programs; but federal intervention into issues of school prayer, abortion rights, busing for desegregation and tax credits for schools practicing discrimination. 2) presided over an increase in the unemployment rate from 7.4% when he entered the White House to a peak of 10.2% in December 1982, when 11.3 million workers were without jobs and only 40% received unemployment compensation.

3) defended cuts in the college student loan program, then five days later proposed tuition tax credits for families with kids in private elementary/secondary schools.

Foreign policies: Reagan 1) approved use of the neutron bomb, several plans for the basing of MX missiles and $4.2 billion for Civil Defense in the event of nuclear war. 2) sent $110 million in military aid to El Salvador and mined the harbors of Nicaragua. 3) called for talks with the USSR and then called that nation an "evil empire" and "the focus of evil in the modern world." 4) Made an off-the-cuff "joke" about bombing the USSR, which the Japanese government later confirmed led to a Soviet defense alert.

I ask each of you, especially those who have been seeing Ronald Reagan as a nice guy and good leader, to stop and ask yourself one more time, "Do I really want him in the White House for four more years?" And before Nov. 6, you might go to the library and read the Files of Facts for yourself. They contain a lot more interesting reminiscences of the past four years.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Human Interest

To the editor:

In the Oct. 8 edition of the Sagamore, Rick Callahan, photography editor, appealed to IUPUI students to send in complaints about the newspaper's flawed coverage. "I was fully prepared to do just that until this week's issue came out.

This week's edition of the Sagamore was full of information and interesting articles. It consisted of the kind of articles I have been waiting for. The articles, "Delaney attacks from campus" and "Learned Love's new course on campus," were very informative, and I really enjoyed the articles "Need for Student Center grows" and "Student modern - day P-Eye".

I was going to write in suggesting more human interest stories, but you seem to have read my mind.

In short, I found this week's Sagamore not only useful, but also very readable. My compliments to all involved in this week's publication. Keep up the good work!

Johnna E. Hampton

Twenty seconds

To the editor:

In the Oct. 8 issue of the Sagamore you admitted witnessing students glancing through the newspaper and then tossing the paper away or saving it to line their cat's litter box.

These quick glances generally last about twenty seconds, you reported. Well, during my quick glance through the paper, I noticed an ad that says, "Advertising really sells in the Sagamore." How could it sell if students are only reading the newspaper for twenty seconds? Or do you only charge the advertisers for twenty seconds of coverage?

Another puzzling fact is not one of the advertisements pertained to cats. You should contact producers of kitty litter and cat food and let them know they would get excellent exposure by advertising in the Sagamore since the paper is used for a kitty litter liner.

A student who spent more than twenty seconds with your paper.

Humor helps teach Arabic

by L.L. Fuller

From Alexandria, Egypt to Munich, Germany to . . . Indianapolis, Indiana. Mohy Saleh, one of IUPUI's most gifted and versatile teachers, proclaims himself well satisfied with the diverse geographical and scholastic directions his career has taken.

Saleh, who became an American citizen during the naturalization ceremony held October 19 at the Indianapolis Convention Center, said the decision to adopt U.S. citizenship was motivated in part by his commitment to the ideals of freedom, and by concern for his family's future.

Saleh has taught at the Alexandrian University of Egypt, the Medical Research Institute of Egypt, and a city university in London. He enjoys his current appointment here, stating;

"IUPUI has a friendly atmosphere . . . the students here are very cooperative."

Saleh, whose youthful appearance belies his 49 years, is currently teaching Arabic 100 through the NELL department and German 101 and 102. He also teaches an Arabic class at Crispus Attucks through the Language Magnet Program for gifted junior-high school students.

Mohy Saleh Rick Callahan

Saleh believes that effective teaching employs humour, patience, and the willingness to explain, and this attitude is evident to his students.

Comments one of his students, "He really cares. He's a born teacher." Another student added that the stories about Arabian culture contributed to an understanding of the language. Still another student said the class was interesting, but that occasionally Saleh became so engrossed in the lecture that he failed to dismiss class!

Mohy Saleh, whose various qualifications include degrees in psychology, Arabic and near-Eastern languages, and education, will soon begin a dissertation to complete a Phd.

Stormy romance emerges

Woolf letters fascinating

The Letters of Vita Sackville-West to Virginia Woolf. Edited by Louisa DeSalvo and Mitchell A. Leaska. Wm. Morrow; $17.95.

By Laura Allen

Louisa De Salvo, an associate professor of English and Women's Studies at Hunter College, and Mitchell A. Leaska, a member of the faculty of New York University, co-edited the first published letters between Vita Sackville-West and Virginia Woolf.

The book is a superb work of literature documenting the love of two prominent women for each other in an aristocratic society, and is preceded by an extraordinary introduction by Leaska. He weaves the story of the lives and loves of these two women of society beginning with the meeting on December 14, 1922 in London at a dinner party up until about four years before the death of Virginia.

Leaska's introduction fills in detailed information about the careers of the two women as writers and the many individual differences and needs that cemented their relationship instead of tearing it apart.

Leaska uses quotes from the diaries of Sackville-West and Woolf to set the pattern of the book. "She is a pronounced Sapphist &...may have an eye on me..." from Virginia's diary parallels an excerpt of Vita's to her husband, "I simply adore Virginia Woolf...Darling, I have quite lost my heart." These two entries were written by the women shortly after their first meeting. It marked the beginning of a love affair that was to last over a period of two decades.

Between the introduction and the final page, the love letters tell of the happiness, sadness, hurt, jealousy and struggles in the relationship, and the implied struggle that the husbands of the women had in regard to the love affair.

The letters, simply written, tell of a stormy romance in which the women interchange roles frequently. Vita, the promiscuous one, is sometimes dominant and aristocratic, and sometimes the protective mother for whom Virginia demonstrated need. Virginia played the role of the intellectual writer and the child who needed affection and mothering.

Vita, in her letters, did not care if she hurt Virginia as she wrote her of the women she met and loved, but Virginia clearly accepted Vita back with open arms after each of Vita's affairs came to a close.

The letters mention a book Virginia wrote, Orlando (1928), which showed Virginia struggling with the idea of Orlando being Vita or Vita being Orlando.

The Letters of Vita Sackville-West to Virginia Woolf, is a fascinating love story that is not fiction but fact, yet entertaining.

Soccer ends at 3-11

by Abby Marmion

The IUPUI men's soccer club ended their 1984 season with a 3-11 record.

The squad finished the final two games with a 1-1 standing, gaining a 3-2 home victory over Franklin College on Oct. 19.

The first point was kicked in by Jeff Phенning, while Jim Yowler scored the second goal. Charles Bavard then made the final score to give the Metros the winning edge.

The victory was short-lived, however, as Taylor University collected a 4-1 win at IUPUI's final match Oct. 20. Bryan Bill scored the only point for the Metros.

Commenting on the season, Assistant Coach Dave Olmstead said, "These were very spirited kids. We were inexperienced and it cost us some games, but we definitely played better toward the end of the season."

Olmstead said he is not giving up the ship for next fall and plans to start working with the team this spring. "We're hoping to go varsity next fall, but we need support of the students. It would be such a shame not to have a team with that beautiful stadium," said the hopeful coach. The club will await the decision from the Board of Trustees on their status for next season.

Head Coach Paul Kluempers will not be returning next fall as he has accepted employment in Bloomington.

Franklin tops Metros

By Matt Shrum

IUPUI's women's volleyball team dropped to 25-10 with losses to Franklin and Butler.

The Metros lost Lori Hefner indefinitely due to a severely sprained ankle. Hefner injured her ankle Oct. 19 at Xavier. She was the top setter in the district prior to her injury.

The Metros enter the final week of the regular season with a match at Indiana State University Monday, Oct. 29 and then host DePauw Oct. 30.

The NAIA District 21 tournament will be Nov. 2-3. The Metros should be one of the favorites behind Franklin.

Rec closings

Registration can be successful

By Karyn May
Staff Writer

Nov. 3 marks the beginning of continuing student registration.

Continuing student registration is advantageous because it offers the best availability of classes, it enables the registrar's office to handle students better and it is less time-consuming due to smaller crowds.

Thomas May, assistant registrar, encourages students to take part and be prepared.

"Continuing registration makes life easier for everyone," he said. "The students are the ones who make continuing registration successful by following three steps."

- plan to register at scheduled time or make a new appointment.
- see counselors prior to appointment.
- have courses and alternate courses approved by counselor.

May said he expects about 19,000 students to register between Nov. 3 and Nov. 7, but said a small percentage of the students are "washed-out." He said most washouts are students who simply can't get their money together or forget to pay their fees.

The deadline for fee payment to the Burner's office for continuing registration is Dec. 14, 1984.

One change made in the continuing registration process is the rescheduling of appointment times. The open period from 4 to 6 p.m. requires an appointment and is available only to students who were supposed to register earlier on that particular day.

May said the change was made because most students who missed their daytime appointment would wait until the open period of the last day of continuing registration and it overloaded the system.

IUPUI's computer system is shared with six other campuses. This limits the capacity of registration to 200 students per hour.

Betty Crawford, a full-time executive secretary for Ransburg Corporation and a part-time student is unhappy about the registration process because the scheduled time is 9 a.m. and she is unable to miss work.

May said, "We're perfectly willing to change students' appointment time to suit their schedule, but we will not move it forward. We will move it backward. All they need to do is contact us and we'll arrange an appointment time to accommodate them."

IUPUI may help Indy host '87 Pan American Games

By Karyn May
Staff Writer

The president of the Pan American Sports Organization, Mario Vazquez Rana, and the executive director of the United States Olympic Committee, Don Miller, were in Indianapolis on Saturday, October 20 to take a look at the city's sports facilities as they search for a new host of the 1987 Pan American games.

Governor Robert Orr and Mayor William H. Hudnut were on hand to meet the men after their tour of Market Square Arena, the Track and Field Stadium, the Tennis Stadium, IU's Natatorium, the Velodrome and the Hoosier Dome.

The events, which take place every four years between the Americas, were originally set for Santiago, Chile with Ecuador named as the back-up location. The negotiations were conducted in Caracas after the completion of the 1983 games held there. At that time, Indianapolis sent a delegation to submit candidacy for an alternate site.

In 1983, Chile defaulted and Ecuador relinquished their rights a few weeks ago. According to wire services, both governments gave up their contracts because of unfit political and economic climates in their countries. Unlike the United States that uses corporate dollars to sponsor such events, Chile and Ecuador must depend on government money for funding.

According to Sandy Knapp, executive director of the Indiana Sports Corporation, the games are about a $20 million project that does not include the construction of major facilities.

Lack of facilities was a problem in Chile and Ecuador whereas Indianapolis is very capable of accomodating the events.

Bruce Smith, executive assistant to Mayor Hudnut, said the only problem Indianapolis would have at the moment is providing sufficient housing for athletes and visitors.

Smith said, "An event like this can have permanent, positive effects that will last even after the 1987 events are over. The provision of more housing would remain a permanent asset, not to mention the prestige and publicity that would accrue to the city."

In reference to the 1982 National Sports Festival, Smith said, "Indianapolis has proven that we are ready and able to handle amateur national and international events."

The Pan American Sports Organization is expected to make a decision in Mexico City where they will meet on Nov. 4-5. Their choice must then be approved by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

The Pan American officials seemed "optimistic and enthused" according to Smith, who added, "We have high hopes that Indianapolis will be the site of the 1987 Pan American Games...things look real good!"
