Health fair to promote fitness, new facilities

Warm-up outfits and jogging shoes will be the uniform of the day at IUPUI on Friday, May 20.

Keeping fit, with the help of check-ups and exercise, will be the theme of an on-campus program taking place at two different locations. A dozen different tests will be provided on the east lawn of the Union Building, and the opportunity for stretching muscles at the new athletic facilities.

A health fair, to be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the tent, will include varied health tests and displays. At hourly intervals, there also will be demonstrations of cycling, weight lifting, tumbling, karate, fencing, and aerobic dancing.

At the Natatorium, track stadium and Sports Center, faculty from the School of Physical Education will conduct clinics throughout the day at half-hour intervals. Topics will include fitness through dance, tennis, badminton, volleyball, racquetball, and volleyball. Also, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., visitors can swim, play outdoor basketball, or jog on the track.

Among the tests in the tent will be those for blood type, burnout, diabetes, glaucoma, pulmonary function, range of motion, sick cell anemia, tuberculosis and weight-calorie correlation. A self-test for fitness will be a routed eight-minute walk from the Union Building to the Natatorium.

The fitness Day/Health Fair program is being sponsored by the IUPUI Staff Council. Dr. Irwin has asked supervisors to make scheduling arrangements so that as many staff members as possible can attend events of the day.

Luncheon items will be on sale at tables near the tent from the food service department of the Union Building.

Hospitals to conduct mock disaster exercise

On Wednesday, May 11, 1983, the Indiana University Hospitals (University, Riley and Long) intend to conduct a mock disaster exercise.

The purposes of this exercise are to test the effectiveness of the disaster plan and familiarize the Hospitals' staff with the actions they should take in the event of an actual disaster.

Mock victims will be brought to the Hospitals, and staff will be expected to respond to those victims as they would in a true disaster. The exercise will be conducted for one hour only.

For additional information or clarification regarding this exercise, contact Jan Michelsen, Director Hospital Relations, 384-8078.

Tutor found overpaid, underworked

To the editor:
When I read an ad on the ground floor of the ET building I thought to myself: here is help for that Fortran CS300 class I've been having problems with. I clipped the number and called. I was reassured initially the rates would be reasonable. I insisted on knowing how reasonable and the guy said $6 per hour. I told him I really could not afford $6 per hour, the most I could afford was $4 per hour which for a student is still expensive and yet again you can't expect free service, so we settled on $5 per hour reluctantly.

My first three meetings with the tutor cost me $60 and I spent a total of $110 and yet I had learned nothing. I had not gained anything at all. Is there any help for people like me?

Can anyone do something to stop this ripping off of students who genuinely need help at affordable prices?

Interviewee touched by computer call

To the editor:
Recently I was contacted over the phone by a computer questioning me about insurance companies. The computer said the reason for it talking to me instead of a real person was that it aimed in obtaining large amounts of responses.

As I was responding to the questions prompted by beeps, I realized to myself — what has technology come to!

To think that if one had the money, a computer could encompass entire directories only to redundantly call till all men or answering machines had been contacted.

The powers of this style of machine then started to unfold. Think of how many people call you over the phone selling anything from cleaning your rug to controlling your lawn. You can always tell three lines into the speech they are selling something.

Now think — if a diction perfect, articulate voice came over the phone talking after a time paused "Hello" from you was sounded.

Just think if that voice was someone you highly respected, baring no barriers, say it was the President of the United States.

I think you would be inclined to listen, at least to more than three lines. If nothing else to quip, "I talked to the president today!"

Truly, this style of machine would free the hands of its operator immensely until data replay time.

I guess I have been touched by this encounter. After the computer called me, and I talked to it, I have been thinking of all the ways I could turn a game playing video toy into cash instead of points.

Term in office 'education' for outgoing president

by Bill Nolan

Current Student Assembly president Stuart Kefer will end his term in office on May 16, surrendering the position to president-elect George Graves.

Looking back over the 1982-83 year, Kefer said yesterday that he considered his term in office "an education, more than anything else." His involvement in numerous programs — such as the Fall Festival, establishment of the evening Child Care Center, and others — gave him many opportunities to see how the university works and to learn how to balance the interests of diverse people and groups.

"It's just like going to classes," Kefer said, "except that you're going to a class to learn how to put on a program. It's more like a job situation where you're working with money, large sums of money, and trying to present something for the students — and trying to work within the university guidelines, trying to meet what you think are the students' wants, and then coming up with a final project.

These experiences, Kefer said, have proven useful in his work as a counselor for the Indianapolis Youth Congress, an organization to create a channel of communication on youth-related issues between the Indianapolis City-County Council and the state legislature. "The areas of concern are obviously different, but the channels of communication are somewhat the same," Kefer said.

Kefer's "pet project" was the establishment of a center to supervise the children of IUPUI students while the parents take classes. "I had noticed that a lot of the Student Assembly's programs in previous years were geared toward the average 8-to-5, Monday-through-Friday type of student. There is really not that much offered for evening and weekend students, nothing that they can really get involved with.

"They have a whole different set of priorities and objectives, as far as going to school is concerned," Kefer observed. "And so a program that you may offer for the day students — like the Fall Festival, or something like that — would not be appropriate for evening students, because most likely the reason they are evening students is that they have other commitments. . . . And so you have to keep that in mind when you're trying to find something you can do for these students. And that's where the idea for the evening child care center came in."

Besides "a few grey hairs," as he said, Kefer has gained a greater understanding of the university during his year in office. "I've benefited from understanding IUPUI a little bit better than I had previously," he said. "Being able to work with a lot of the people here, and with the administration, you get to know them as well as the system that they have to work in, and you get to see both sides of it."

The experience increased Kefer's understanding, he said, of the difficulties administrators sometimes face in meeting the needs of students. He recalled that one of the reasons for his becoming involved in student politics was his discontent with tuition increases, diminishing parking space for students and lack of security at the Herron campus.

Becoming involved with the Student Assembly, Kefer "got to see the other side of the coin," he said. He gained a sense of "what the administration has to do, how their hands are tied financially on certain matters.

"I also got to meet some very unique people," he continued. "Some of the people on the Student Assembly are unique, for lack of a better word." His duties as president taught him, he said, "a lot about working with people. I think if I had to pick out one area in which I've learned the most, I would have to say 'working with people': the different types of personalities you have to deal with, and how to approach those personalities."

"I've definitely gotten an education," he continued. "It's been a learning experience in many ways. . . ."

This kind of learning, Kefer said, sometimes interfered with his education in the more usual sense, involving books, classes and the like.

"Classes?" he asked, laughing. "What are those?" Only partly in jest, he advised that future Student Assembly presidents take only one class per semester.

Along with his duties as president, his job and his studies, Kefer had to juggle the requirements of the various committees he served on. During the past Fall semester, he was chairman of the Student Organizations Board. "I feel that that is a resource area that, as far as the Student Assembly is concerned, was virtually untapped this year. . . ."

Some members of the assembly "saw the Student Organization Board as a threat," Kefer said. "They saw it as a power — a negative power, or a negative faction working against the Student Assembly. I think it could have been just the opposite: had the Student Assembly been more involved in Student Organizations, Student Organizations would have been more involved in the Student Assembly."

A "good example" of the groups' failure to cooperate, said Kefer, was brought forward at the Solidarity Seminar, a meeting of student groups held last fall.

"Student Organizations felt that they were getting shafted by the university and the Student Assembly," Kefer said, "and they had gotten fed up with it. A couple of organizations came up and said, 'Listen, we want the chairperson of the Student Organizations Board to be somebody from the Student Organizations and not the Student Assembly president, because they are more in tune with Student Organizations and they have more time to deal with it.' As student body president, I didn't have the time to deal with a lot of the things that came up. I would have liked to have been able to, but I simply didn't have the time."

To remedy that problem, Vasilis Kouloulas, a senator at large in the assembly and a member of the Hellenic Students' League and other organizations, served as chairperson of the board during the Spring semester.

"I think the Student Assembly president should be on the Student Organizations Board, but not as a chairperson," Kefer said. "And that's the way it has been the second semester."

Kefer also currently is serving on the Student Services Task Force, which evaluates the effectiveness of Student Services activities. And as a member of the Student Affairs Committee, he was involved in settling the question of what distinguishes a dependent from an independent student.

As a member of the Indiana State Higher Education Association, Kefer worked with other student leaders from around the state to prevent the passage of a bill in the state legislature that would have transferred authority for setting tuition costs from the IU Board of Trustees to the legislature. "That would definitely decrease any chance the students have of giving their input in setting tuition increases," Kefer noted.

Besides the tongue-in-cheek advice that the president take no more than three hours of classes, Kefer offered some serious advice to those who succeed him in student government.

"One of the things that I saw this year that I was concerned about," he said, "was that a lot of individuals lose (continued on page 6)

Economic future, awards included in business students' conference

by Duane R. Elliott

This year's annual Business Conference started off with Louis Rukeyser's comments on the nation's economic future. The host of television's "Wall Street Week" delighted his listeners for more than two hours with a succinct analysis of current financial and economical issues, delivered in his bantering style. Professor Thomas P. Hustad, chairman of the conference, remarked after the speech that nobody speaks for two and one half hours and holds an audience's attention like that.

The keynote speaker stressed the importance of improving public economic education, and said that inflation must continue to be attacked "for it is the root of the recession problem."

Honors and awards presented at the conference luncheon went to such distinguished alumni as Internal Revenue Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger, Jr. The luncheon speaker was David T. Kearns, president and director of Xerox Corporation. Kearns stated that "economic and social elemental problem-solving and teamwork" are not the main problems within the current economic upheaval; the main problem, he said, is "management at all levels."

His recommendations included the elimination of policies of protectionism; and, focusing on quality in products, service, employees, and management. Kearns said, "we cannot compete effectively unless we tackle and solve our biggest productivity problem—white collar productivity."

Panel discussions and workshops provided opportunities for business men and students to meet with industry leaders and faculty in a variety of areas. Workshops were held on the Bell System's strategic planning system. Workshops were held on office automation accounting issues in quality control and opportunities in the China market. The impact of sports on central Indiana and the results of the Indiana/Tokyo work commitment study were the subjects of the panel discussion.

Study of foreign language and literature focus of project

Central Indiana has been chosen to become part of a new national project that is designed to help teachers of foreign language and literature develop professionally and also teach them how to increase public interest in foreign languages more effectively.

John Barlow, professor of German and director of Foreign Language Programs at Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis, will serve as the project director of the Indianapolis branch of the program. He says the first step will include language teachers from Butler University, Indiana Central University, IUPUI, Marion College and secondary school language teachers in the eight-county Indianapolis area.

Funds for the project are being provided by the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Rockefeller Foundation and the University of Pennsylvania.

One of the goals of the project will be the organization of monthly meetings of language faculty in the Indianapolis area. Barlow says these meetings will provide opportunities for faculty to keep up-to-date in their field, talk with colleagues and benefit from contact with language teachers from diverse specialties and academic sectors. He believes that language teachers, like doctors and lawyers, need regular opportunities for professional development.

The advantage this project has over others in the past, Barlow believes, is that it is open to teachers from all languages and all levels, from middle-school to college.

The Indianapolis program is one of 80 that form a nationwide program known as "Strengthening the Humanities through Foreign Language and Literature Studies." Claire Gaudiani, director of the national project, said that the organization's aim is to "... make ongoing professional education for foreign language faculty a matter of local and regional responsibility. Faculty from various levels can work collectively to meet challenges faced by group members, their students and their institutions."

The first Indianapolis meeting has already been scheduled for May 14. It will be held in LE 100 and will focus on "criteria for evaluating and selecting textbooks."

Students honor faculty, administrators

The student body at Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis has selected Professor Edgar H. Hemmer, West Lafayette, as the Outstanding Educator of the Year.

A professor of finance and real estate in the IU School of Business at IUPUI, Hemmer was presented along with several other faculty and staff recognized at this year's banquet.

The Top Administrator Award, the Edward D. Moore Award, went to Mike Waggoner, director of student services. Campus minister Jim Stander received the Extra Mile Award.

The Lois H. Luhse faculty appreciation award which exemplifies devotion and integrity went to Rebecca T. Markel, associate professor in the Department of Pediatrics and Department of Family and Women's Medicine at the IU School of Nursing.

Metros win NAIA tournament despite several injuries

by Matt Shrum

The IUPUI women's softball team won the school's first National Association for Intercollegiate Athletics District 21 championship last weekend.

The Metros defeated Taylor University 10-0, Anderson College 13-4 and Franklin College 6-4 to advance to the finals of the double elimination tournament.

In the deciding game of the tournament IUPUI opened an early 4-0 lead but Franklin closed to 4-2. After a half-hour rain delay, Franklin scored four runs in the top of the fifth inning to take a 6-4 lead, the first time in the tournament that IUPUI had been behind.

The Metros turned on their offensive firepower in the bottom of the fifth, playing their best inning of the season. They sent 15 batters to the plate and scored 11 runs to take a 15-4 lead. The team added six more runs in the sixth inning for a final score of 21-6.

IUPUI will now take its 32-6-2 record into the Tri-District tournament to be held here this weekend. The Metros will compete against the winner from Ohio and Michigan.

The team won the tournament despite several players' injuries. With two weeks left in the season, right fielder Tracy Taylor injured a knee. Designated hitter Sue Beas came in to play right field and Susie Smith and Idelle Williams took turns as DH.

In the final week of the season it was discovered that Chris Nichols, starting second baseman and the team's leading hitter with a .473 average, had a fractured wrist and would be out for the rest of the season.

Smith, normally the team's backup shortstop, moved to second to replace Nichols. In the Metro's win over Anderson, Smith was injured in a collision at first base while covering on a bunt. She suffered a sprained ankle and missed the rest of the tournament.

Still not completely recovered from her knee injury, Taylor stepped in at second base to replace Smith, who may be ready to play in the Tri-District.

"You can't dwell on the injuries," said coach Nick Kellum. He added, "We have four or five days to regroup, take care of the injuries and teach some people new positions."

Kellum said that he felt the Metros played well during the tournament and added, "I think we are at our best right now."

"Our goal at the start of the year," Kellum said, "was to go to the Nationals, and we are one week away from that. We will take them one step at a time."

sight of who they're supposed to be representing. And a lot of them, rather than representing the students in an issue, sometimes end up representing themselves. They don't voice what would be considered a student opinion, but rather their own." As a result, Keefer said, "sometimes an action is taken by a small number of people that the students necessarily don't want to see happen."

Thus, Keefe said, "My advice would be, 'Make sure that when you take an action, especially one concerning something that would affect

The assembly, Keefer noted, "has the highest level of power on this campus to voice the concerns of the students. And that can be a very positive thing; misused, it can be a very negative thing — not only for the students but in the eyes of the administration."

Keefer offered an example of such misuse, which he related to his second piece of advice for his successors: what he described as the Student Assembly Executive Committee's recent effort to place assembly representatives on the Student Publications Board, which oversees the Sagamore and other publications.

"I think that the student government should always be open to the investigation of students," Keefer said. "Students should be able to read about it in the Sagamore whether it be positive or negative. . . I feel strongly that the Student Assembly should not in any way be involved with the Sagamore. They should be two entirely separate organizations. . . I would strongly urge against any influence or interference by the Student Assembly [upon the Sagamore]."

On a more positive note, Keefe said that he would advise his successor to note that "this university is entering a time of uncertainty, at best, as far as student population and enrollment are concerned. The best thing for the Student Assembly to do, for the university and the students, is to get involved and to let Indianapolis know what this place is all about — create a positive image."

WE WROTE THE BOOK ON HOW TO PAY FOR COLLEGE.

If you plan to go to college,
you'll not only need good grades,
you'll need good financing.
And joining today's Army can help you get it.

If you qualify for the Army College Fund, you can learn a skill while you accumulate up to $15,200 for college in just two years. Or up to $20,100 in three years. And all you contribute is $100 a month from your Army pay.

To find out why so many students are making today's Army a prerequisite for college, visit your local Army Recruiter.
Ask him for a copy of the Army College Fund booklet.

Call: (317) 269-7681
