LEARNING RESOURCES SYMPOSIUM ANNOUNCED

Dr. Robert Kegan, lecturer on education at the Harvard Graduate School of Education, and co-director of the Massachusetts Clinical-Developmental Institute, will be the keynote speaker at this year's Learning Resources Symposium scheduled for Feb. 11. He will touch on elements of lifelong emotional and intellectual development particularly relevant to the college experience.

Theme of the symposium will be "Responding to Students: Revitalizing Teaching." The keynote session and eight faculty panels will discuss the questions: What do we understand about student learning and development? How can that understanding inform our teaching? An additional feature will be the presentation of the first annual Edward C. Moore Teaching Award. Details later.

ORIGINAL TEACHERS OF THE HERRON SCHOOL

An unexpected bequest in 1902 from an almost unknown donor, John Herron, led to the establishment of the Herron School of Art, now part of IUPUI, and a museum, now the Indianapolis Museum of Art. An exhibition on display through Jan. 17 at the Museum of Art features paintings of the early teachers who led the Herron School of Art from a local institution to one of national significance.

GERMAN WORK-STUDY PROGRAM OFFERED

A new work-study program in the Federal Republic of Germany is being offered this summer by the Department of Foreign Languages at Indiana University at South Bend.

An opportunity to work in a major German corporation will make foreign study available to those who may be financially unable to enroll in more traditional programs. Participants will be able to reduce their travel costs and earn extra money. Students from all I.U. campuses may apply, but they must have four semesters of college-level German or the equivalent.

The program will open on May 19 with travel to Luxembourg, Cologne and Berlin for an orientation to German culture. Students then will participate in an intensive one-month language course at the Carl Duisberg Language College in Cologne.

For additional information call South Bend (219) 237-4316, or 237-4210.

SCHOLAR-DIPLOMAT SEMINARS ANNOUNCED

Scholar-Diplomat Seminars, designed to bring academics and state department personnel together for exchange of information on areas of mutual interest, will be held by the Department of State June 13-17 in Washington, D.C. Seminars that week will include: Economic and Business Affairs,, European Affairs, Latin American Affairs, Middle East and South Asian Affairs, Politico-Military Affairs. (A seminar on East Asian Affairs is scheduled for March 7-11.)

Deadline for applying is 60 days in advance of the desired seminar. Application forms are available from the office of the Dean, International Programs, I.U. Bloomington, telephone 5-8669. Applicants who are invited to attend will receive a travel grant of $250 from International Programs to partially offset the cost of attending. The spring Foreign Policy Conference for teachers of international relations will not qualify for support.

Indianapolis faculty members must route applications through the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs at IUPUI. Further information may be obtained from that office, ext. 8285.

SNYDER RESIGNS

Lee M. Snyder Jr., director of the Personnel Division at IUPUI, has accepted the position of director of personnel services at Cornell University. Clifford Robinson, assistant director of personnel, will be acting director until Snyder's replacement is named.

Snyder, whose resignation is effective Jan. 11, has been at IUPUI for 3½ years. A graduate of Indiana University of Pennsylvania, he also has held several personnel positions at Pennsylvania State University.
