O.K. for you,
Goodyear! No

My Santa's in Trouble
by Harry Goodyear

I enter the store with great delight,
Two weeks from tomorrow, Christmas night.
Inside, people are packed and jammed
And all store aisles are stuffed and crammed;
Boxes of cards and nuts and games
And mechanical monsters with odd-sounding names.
Models and marbles and marveling toys
Some with bright lights, others make noise.
But there is no room. I cannot walk;
What's even worse, I can't hear myself talk.
The P.A. booms: "A blue-light special"
And the stymied crowd becomes motion perpetual.
I'm pushed along to the store's end
As the "blue-light" announcement booms out again
A woman curses, "Damn! That's nice!
I bought one yesterday at regular price."
One of two boys scream "I want popcorn."
The other one blasts a bicycle horn
The P.A. booms, "Toy-clerk to nine
And customers at six find another line"
And the "blue-light special lasts one more minute
Get what you can before we end it."
And "Up front here we have a boy lost"
And "Shop here often, it'll cut your costs.
And the special this time will soon be gone,
So rush to the opposite end of the store
And make a good buy, a dog-house door,
My head is spinning, my feet in pain
I'll never, never shop again.
Someone whacks me with a plastic sword
And I swear Xmas is a four-letter word
The capital X, its rating defines,
And the S on the end means dollar signs.
My Santa's in trouble. What can I do?
Society itself, created this brew.

NOTE:
Inspired by Nicky Goodyear who, when hearing my comment that "Christmas is a four letter word," said "Yes, beginning with X and ending with dollar signs," and by the chapter, "My Little Boy is Having Difficulties" in Joseph Heller's new book, Something Happened.
Independence: Pro or Con?

Now is the time for all good men...uh, persons...to come to the aid of their university. Whether or not you believe in independence for IUPUI, you should be getting in touch with your state representatives to let them know what you feel about the subject.

Again this year, there are pieces of legislation proposed aimed at making IUPUI a separate university, apart from the I.U. Bloomington system.

Also proposed is a bill to change the power structure of the present Commission on Higher Education. Such a change, in the opinion of some state representatives, will have direct effort on the Indiana University reorganization plan.

A second bill proposes the establishment of a permanent Higher Education Council to consider the functions and problems of the state's university system.

Last year House Bill 1376 died during political infighting between Representatives Burrous and Nelson. The bill would've made IUPUI autonomous. So again this year, the same debates will be raised. But this time, the questions will be aired in the light of the June 29 I.U. reorganization plans—this will perhaps have some effect on the legislators' decisions.

So whatever your opinions—pro or con—we suggest that you contact your local representative. And while you're at it, you might like to send on a line or two to the attention of Larry Boerst, Chairman of the State Senate Finance Committee and the man with the pursestrings in the whole deal.

Talk about "Blind Justice"...

So it appears that the police shake-up has begun. In fact, by the time this editorial is printed, it seems that the shake-up may already be completed. With Raymond Stratton demoted and Lumpkin retiring, it seems that the politically expedient action of the moment is to let the police department do the work.

Not to say that the police department hasn't been the object of political squabbles in the past. That would be naive of the first order. However, for the police department to be made the sole object of such political infighting cannot be in the interests of law enforcement or public welfare. For the leaders of the police department to be demoted, retiring, and resigning without prosecution or trials to prove their innocence or guilt; this cannot be in the interests of justice.

We note that several of the younger men in the department have been promoted to fill the positions that were left vacant by their predecessors. We consider it interesting that these men would take those jobs, knowing full well that their positions could be placed in jeopardy as easily as they were with the men who held the positions before them.

Whenever the local government can exercise this much power over the functions of what, by rights, should not be as politically charged as is the police department, the only people who suffer are the people.

Dear Senator Hartke,

I am writing this letter because of the appalling attitude and action that President Ford has taken concerning the recent bill before him calling for an increase in the veterans benefits. Being one of the more than 21 hundred veterans attending Indiana University—Purdue University, at Indianapolis, I feel that this type of action on our President's part is one of the lowest possible blows that could be dealt to those respected human beings that went to serve our nation's cause in maintaining peace and good will.

With the added cost of education and many other necessary items, the veteran of high standards can't imagine having nothing less than the feeling of being deprived and left out by those persons who should be helping in his fight for equal opportunity within the society which he and his family live and work.

It is not like we are looking forward to this bill to increase or become a propellant of inflation, but solely as one of the deterrents to the problem of increasing inflation. How could we look at this as becoming one of the major deterrents? With the increase ability of the veterans productivity within society, he becomes a higher wage earner, by him becoming a higher wage earner, he begins to pay higher taxes for he has moved from one tax bracket to another. Who actually benefits? To begin with the veteran, the manufacturer, the community, and of course the government who actually started the ball rolling in the first place.

In comparing the veterans benefits of today with those of the period of 1945-1948, the veteran has steadily lost out because benefits of today only amount to about 2/3 of that pertaining to that period.

In bringing my letter to a close I will use a quote from the quotable Mr. Kennedy—"While setting the highest moral standards—must not impair the ability of the government to recruit personnel of the highest quality and capacity. We need to draw upon America's entire reservoir of talent and skill to help conduct our generation's most important business—the public business."

Respectfully yours,
Jonas T. Brown

FOR TEN CENTS YOU COULD SAVE A FRIEND'S LIFE.

A phone call. A simple, ten-cent phone call for a cab could save your friend’s life. If your friend has been drinking too much, he shouldn’t be driving.

The automobile crash is the number one cause of death of people your age. And the ironic thing is that the drunk drivers responsible for killing young people are most often other young people.

Take a minute. Spend a dime. Call a cab. That’s all. If you can’t do that, drive him yourself. Or let him sleep on your couch.

We’re not asking you to be a doctor or a cop. Just a friend.

IF YOU LET A FRIEND DRIVE DRUNK, YOU'RE NO FRIEND.

Coal Mine Classrooms: an Appalachian adventure

by Tom Bidwell

Slouched down with knees folded nose high, a group of adventurous explorers peered out the sides of their small red metal cars as they entered the mountain’s side. Descending, first slowly then quickly, they were swallowed in darkness. Soon a world unknown was unveiled before them—the 40’ high world of the deep coal mine.

Taking the trip were students in the Appalachian Semester, accompanied by their supervisor, Julian D. Mosley. The Appalachian Semester is a unique regional studies program conducted by Union College in Barbourville, Kentucky.

Conducting the tour were mine superintendents and workmen, illustrating the use of their machinery and tools of trade. With backs turned against the dust covered coal seams, the students observed the daily operations of coal production from rock bed to coal transporter.

A question-answer rap session capped off the afternoon’s activities, and the group exchanged views often stemming from much publicized controversy. When asked about the company’s policy in regards to strip mine reclamation, a spokesman for the firm outlined the “progressive” steps his company is taking. The noon waned, and the discussion terminated with new insights and no one getting hot under the collar.

The day was long and like many others filled with new experiences and a little fun on the side.

Upon first contact with Appalachian problems, impressions varied among this semester’s students. Holly Johnson, a Dickinson College student from Edison, New Jersey, expressed despair when she said, “When I came down I thought I could find an answer, but I know I can’t.”

A trip to a Cincinnati ghetto unveiled some realities to a few of the students. Wayne Jlichrest, a Wesley College student from Waynesboro, Virginia, found that the Appalachian migrant is living in the “world of both worlds—urban and rural.”

Field placements were the highlight of the semester as they were the first real chance the students had to be with people and see life from their perspectives.

Phil Cohen from Dickinson College and Howard Looney from Guilford College decided to help start a newspaper in Manchester, Kentucky. It was difficult going but the first issue finally rolled off the press. The paper, a small tabloid called “The Clay-Jackson Roadrunner” was “a voice for the poor,” said Cohen.

Other students such as Holly Johnson and Kathy Siemon from Dickinson worked for lawyers in the Mountain People’s Rights organization. Other students packed agencies that they felt were suited to their particular interests.

Since the one-semester, regional studies program was started in 1976, students from 60 colleges and universities across the country have participated. They have come from every part of the country, including Baylor in Texas, Drake in Iowa, Drew in New Jersey, Loyola in Chicago, and from many other junior and senior institutions.

The comprehensive academic program, including classroom and field experience, provides 15 semester hours of credit in sociology and social work. Academic credit for field work in other disciplines is currently under development.

The semester begins with several weeks of orientation sessions with general classroom work and seminars. In addition to faculty members from Union and other schools in the area, guest speakers lead discussions on various Appalachian subjects. A weekend Communications Workshop and a short course in regional dialects, analyzed from the viewpoint of linguistics, are incorporated in the orientation. Brief field trips are scheduled in keeping with seminar discussions.

Following the orientation, students ordinarily spend one day a week in classroom sessions and three days in individualized “living—learning experiences,” designed around the students’ own interests. The final day of each week is devoted to a combination of field trips, seminars and reaction sessions where field experiences are related to academic study areas. Field work options include a social work practicum or independent field research in social work, sociological field research, service-learning projects, and independent field research in sociology.

Additional information on the program may be obtained by contacting Julian D. Mosley, director of the Appalachian Semester, Union College, Barbourville, Kentucky 40906.
Last chance for "Entertainment"

by Suzanne Scooggins

In these days when the consumer is feeling depressed due to his pocketbook, a happy-go-lucky, delightfully unrealistic movie is just right. Will he jump up, if only for two hours. "That's Entertainment," a MGM offering, is a Goldwyn Mayer movie musicals, certainly fits the bill. That is, if you don't object to Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers dancing down your throat and a pettishly-smiling Esther Williams plunging from a smoke-filled 50 foot cliff into a pool of star-spangled chlorine.

Famous song-and-dance scenes from MGM's scores of musicals have been cleverly coordinated to provide the viewer with a new and moment film experience. In fact, the movie-goer is likely to feel worn out afterwards as if he had danced for two hours.

Jack Haley, Jr., producer of the film and husband of Liza Minnelli, includes comments from several actors and actresses in the musicals as they are today. It is somewhat of a shock to see an adolescent, freshly-scrubbed-face Mickey Rooney as Andy Hardy one moment, while the next Rooney appears as he is today, a heavy-set, rapidly-aging man.

Elizabeth Taylor is as glamorous and beautiful today, in a more mature sense as she was 20 years ago. Although she did not participate in many of the MGM musicals, her thoughtful comments on the history of MGM are a credit to the film.

Judy Garland is featured in several segments, the most important being several teenage movies she made with Mickey Rooney and the beloved "The Wizard of Oz." Gene Kelly is one of the brightest entertainers as he makes getting soaking wet an enviable, pleasurable experience in his smooth, skillful rendition of "Singing in the Rain."

If you are an old-movie fan, particularly a fan of movie musicals of twenty and thirty years ago, "That's Entertainment" is a glittering spectacle you don't want to miss. It is a saga of what Hollywood is all about—pulling in the crowds to the box offices. And though MGM's musicals seem monotonous at times, the ultimate reaction to "That's Entertainment" is one of enjoyment. Besides the superficial appeal of the film, a profound respect for the talented men and women of the MGM movie musicals prevails.

The show is making its second tour of Indy-town—catch it now or wait for NBC to buy the tele rights.

Every year at this time, the season so close to Christmas, people complain about the loss of their youthful "Christmas Spirit." They always blame themselves for not feeling like Christmas anymore. Why not? Can these people help being tired of Christmas? In fact, dreading it, when Christmas starts somewhere between the Fourth of July and Thanksgiving, but always by the day after Thanksgiving? With as many people as there are milling around on the Earth, one cannot blame the stores for starting their big Christmas campaign early, but a month early? Why can't Christmas be celebrated like most of the other holidays by holding off on the ads until a couple of weeks before? The season Christmas starts so early, the stores will claim, is to insure that everyone will have a chance to get what they want for their loved one. A very admirable intention, but a false one. Those stores that keep telling you about it in one form or another, how hard they are trying to make Christmas happy, are really sitting back and looking at their projected sales and projected profit. They don't speak in terms of how happy they are making someone by selling them the product. They talk about how much they are going to make the first weekend after Thanksgiving.

People ask every year at this time, where their Christmas spirit has gone. It has gone to put money in the pockets of business men. This is not to deny their means of making a living, but to deny them the cover of saying it is for Christmas. How many "Santas" offer pictures of the kid sitting on their lap, make that offer at the cost of film and printing the picture? If they did, that would be an example of Christmas spirit where a person makes a sacrifice for another in order to give happiness, but they don't. If I may be self-indulgent for a moment, every year at this time I ask myself why I don't have the Christmas spirit. I hate Christmas because of the commercials. Advertising that has taken on. Christmas is done for money and solely for money. I wish that business could be cut out of the Christmas picture. That is what I wish they would not play up Christmas so much.

An example might clarify. Why don't the ads read, "Christmas. A Special time of year. A time for loving and sharing..." and then maybe the name of the store at the bottom? Simply leave out all the garbage about what they have which is "just right for your loved one." Of "if you don't have that much money, maybe this affordable gift." Between the lines it reads, "If you would like to give your loved one..." — but you can't afford it, why not give her..." In either case come to us. They are saying, "In either case spend your money here..." Because we don't give a shit what you buy as long as you buy it here. Whether Christmas is the celebration of the birth of Christ, or just a special time for the special and even the unknown people around you, by all means, keep it special. Let's work to take away the saccharine sugar coating from Christmas. The feeling that we must give, and give a lot, rather than feeling we don't want to give. This is a great time for it. I am tired of it every year, and every year I will go through the same, confused and angry mood. It is such a mess now, my goat won't even give milk.

Reorganization organization

The Board of Trustees of Indiana University approved a reorganization plan of Indiana University. One major aspect of this reorganization provides for the IUPUI Division of Education and the School of Education in Bloomington to become one single operating unit.

Before this action was finalized, groups representing both campuses met in many discussion sessions concerning the concept of merger. Advantages were seen for both units. The IUPUI Division Education will realize an expansion for suggestions, professional growth, faculty support, and benefits from the national and international contacts of a school that has provided leadership in education for many years. The School of Education of Bloomington will be provided with a much broader base for field experiences for students particularly interested in urban education, reorganization organization wishes to provide gifts, food and clothing to needy families in the Bloomington area contact the donor consultant at the United Christmas Service for suggestions and assistance. Call Mary Alice Reynolds, 630-4296.

Students enrolled in the IUPUI Division of Education will notice little or no change immediately as a result of this action since many details of the plan are still being set to finalize an operating procedure for this merger.

Five committees have been formed to draft policies and guidelines for operating the single unit. These committees are made up of administrators, faculty and students from both campuses. Any student who has ideas or concerns related to this matter should feel free to communicate these to committee members so that the best plan can be provided to meet the needs of all.

BQE: Hi, sports fans. I have a surprise for you this Christmas. It's the latest issue for Christmas. I brought in a real pro to tell you about your Yuletide dessert. Please welcome the pastry chef from the Chartruese Goose restaurant, Don "Bruce" DePeaches. How's the fruit pie business, Bruce?

BDB: Honestly, Barbara, you can be so tacky at times.

BQE: Cool it, Thweetheart, just tell them about the food.

BDB: You make me so mad I could just scream. Bruce, keep your voice down, Cutie. What will the neighbors think?

BDB: DePeaches.

BQE: Anyway, kids, Bruce is going to tell you about one of his favorite recipes, Gay Lib Christmas Dessert, or as he calls it...

BDB: First, you simmer the beef in a small amount of water until it's tender. Then let it cool. Next take all of the bone and grate and chop the meat up. Cook the remaining stock down until about 1/4 cup remains.

BQE: You're going good, Kaka. Just keep it moving.

BQE: Something new! Twinkletoes is doing impressions of Ethnic Earl.

DBD: What? All those about your love life, sailor. Don't you know that these people won't be able to have this stuff for Christmas?

DBD: So what? There are a lot of things they probably won't get for Christmas. They can have it for New Year's Day.

BQE: Well finish the thing, would you please?

DBD: When you're ready for the pies, use two cups of the mix in a double crust. Then cook it for 25 minutes at 400 degrees.

BQE: This is the last time I'll ever ask you for a recipe. A person could starve to death waiting to eat this thing. Does it take this long to get something to eat at the Chartruese Goose?

DBD: Oh, heavens, no. On Friday night you can usually pick up something in about 20 minutes, if you're not picky.

BQE: Speaking of picky, why don't you go home and help your roommate with his face.

DBD: AAAAAUUUGGGGHRRRRRRR.

We're surprised that they don't claim it cures cancer.

The Makers of STEP On Treatment make a claim that STEP On Treatment is a stoplight for your nose.

BQE: You mean they come out of protecting engine parts to reduce nose irritation and aves.

BDB: It's a case of thick glass that makes the or it's added to water.

BDB: You mean you can use this stuff in glass containers put in boiler of hot water. If you can use that. Who cares. Take the expense of STEP On Treatment, it's worth your while. And it's not a reassurance for nose irritation and aves. You can't use this stuff for nose irritation and aves.

Remark: Most nose drops say you can use glass containers. But the DDB can't understand you. All we can say is that it's good for nose irritation and aves.

BQE: Leave me alone, you mean person. I'll get mean with you in a minute.

BQE: It's finally happening. Herald the coming of the Mean Queen.

BDB: I hope your false eyelashes melt. But back to the recipe. After you have all of those things in the saucepan, heat it to a boil.

BQE: Speaking of boils, how's your roommate, Peter Pizzazz?

BDB: You leave him out of this. He's a kind person.

BQE: You mean he's a one-of-a-kind person.

BDB: Kill the chatter, garbage mouth I want to finish this. When the stuff is boiling, add the butter and vinegar and mix well. Then add all of that to the crock. Store the crock, covered, in a cool place for three or four weeks, stirring every three or four days.

BQE: Three or four weeks! You didn't tell me it took that long to make.

BDB: I've met some things that took longer than that to make.

BQE: I don't want to hear
