Top 1979 IUPUI stories reviewed

by Mike Galloway and Joni Steele

As 1979—IUPUI's tenth year of existence—comes to a close, it's time to review the year's top stories on this campus.

•Metro basketball program: The Metro men's team began the year by losing five players through academic disqualifications. With only four players eligible to continue the schedule, Coach J. Kirby Overman held tryouts and found enough players to field a team.

The Metro completed the season with a 5-21 record with Overman calling them "no challenge" to an opposing team at one point.

Both Overman and assistant coach Sam Johnson resigned their positions at the season's end.

In June, former Purdue star Mel Garland was chosen as the team's new coach and the team is currently playing better than ever with a 5-3 record, two of those defeats coming in tournament play.

•Learn and Shop: Started by Weekend College founder James East, the Learn and Shop program took college education—and credits—to area shopping malls. The program received national and international attention, and helped raise IUPUI's fall enrollment.

•Enrollment: Although enrollments in colleges and universities throughout the United States have been declining, IUPUI showed a unique trend—a 4.1 percent increase in the number of students attending classes.

•Liberal arts faculty unite: In the spring, the School of Liberal Arts faced a trustee-ordered six percent budget cut. Although she later changed her mind, Dean Martha Francois decided to cut faculty, who then formed an organization called the United Faculty. The faculty criticized Francois' failure to consult them before making the decision to cut faculty positions.

Recently, liberal arts faculty joined the American Federation of Teachers; forming a union, Local 3950.

•Toxicology Lab: A woman was shot to death and a fire started in the School of Medicine's Toxicology Lab in April.

The woman, Linda Lou Lehrman, was the one-time supervisor of the suspect in the case, James Ramsey. Ramsey allegedly entered the lab and fired at Lehrman, striking her in the head.

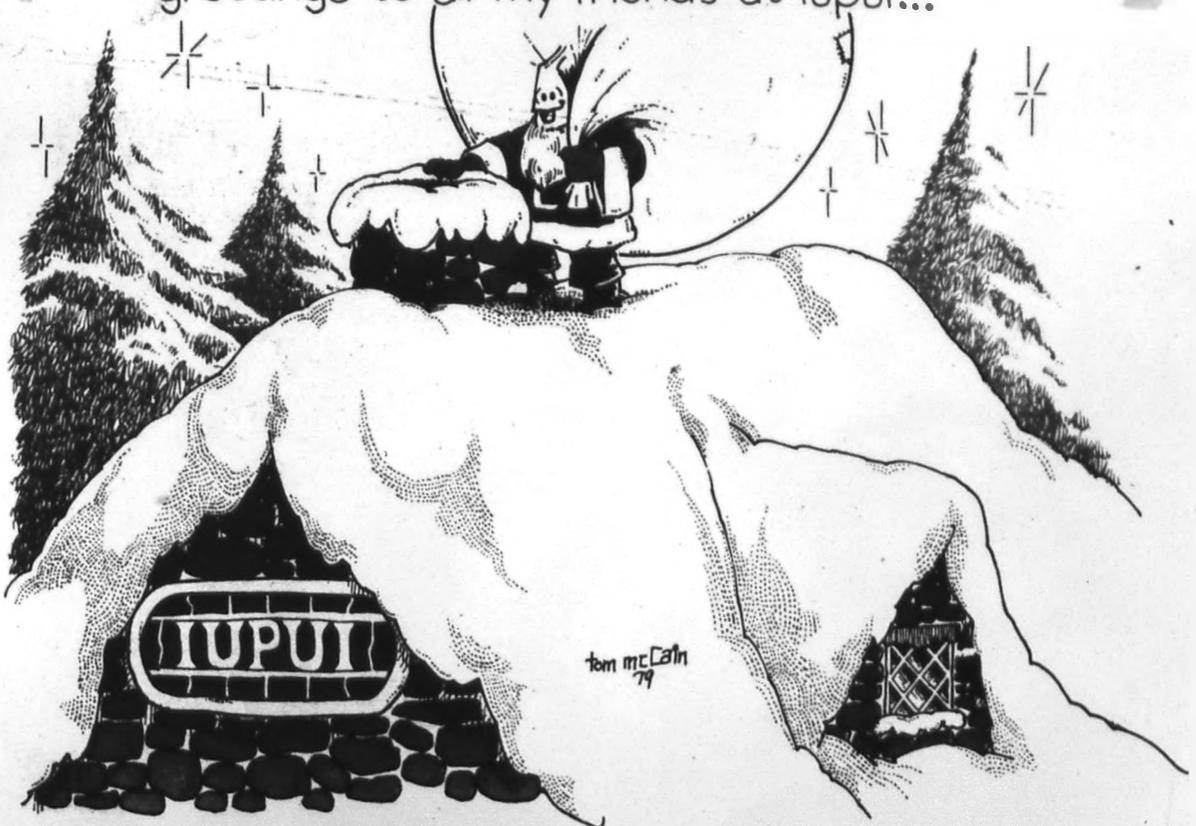

Then he is said to have started the fire, causing $300,000 in damage.

•Joseph Clark shooting: Joseph Clark, Jr., a chemistry major in the School of Science, was shot and killed by Marion County Sheriff's Deputy Ernest Riggs following a routine call to a party.

A Sheriff's merit board called the shooting "accidental, but unjustified," and the Chemistry Club is trying to start a scholarship in his name and an honorary degree for his parents.

'Hands off Iran'—panel

by Ndunga K. Balakushna
"Send the Shah back to Iran" was the final verdict of the "U.S. Hands Off Iran" panel discussion held here last Friday.

The panel also noted that the Shah is not the issue in the current Iranian situation, saying the U.S. is using the Shah as another "divergent tactic" to cover up the real problem.

The real problem is that the Shah is a criminal and he should be returned to Iran and stand trial, the panel said.

"The Shah is not a friend of the American people. He may be friends of influential politicians such as Kissinger and Rockefeller and a friend of big oil companies, but certainly not the American people," Socialist Workers Party member Danny Booher said.

The Shah is a ruthless and cold-blooded killer who should pay for his action, the panel said, adding that the government is fully aware of the crimes committed by the Shah, yet insists he can continue to seek political asylum in this country.

In effect, what the government is doing is harboring a criminal and this is not the American way, the panel said. Iran should be allowed to determine its own destiny, noted the panel, and by "any means necessary." This means the panel approved of the taking of the American hostages by the Iranian students.

Noting that the seizure of the hostages was a defensive technique to negotiate the return of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi to Iran, the panel stated that the student's actions are justifiable. The panel pointed out, "The seizure of the embassy was not wrong because it was the only action available to the Iranian people at the time."

The press also came under heavy attack by the panel. It cited the press for "distorting the truth about the Shah"—both past and present—and the current situation.

"America is not being held hostage," the panel said, "The American government is. The government is responsible for this whole mess which began in 1953 with a military coup in Iran, which was supported by the U.S. government."

"The press hasn't interviewed a single member of the Moslem world to get their views," said Amin Alghani of the Indianapolis Moslem Association. The panel said the press makes the students look like militants ruled by a feeble, old man, while in fact they—Iranians—are a political force that needs to be contended with.

Campus Crime

by Ndunga K. Balakushna
Campus Crime is compiled weekly from the Indiana University Police-Indianapolis Division reports. All incidents will be published as a matter of public record and names will be withheld.

Mon., Nov. 26 A careless bather in Ball Residence forgot a 1 1/2 carat diamond ring she placed over a basin on the second floor bathroom of that building. The victim said she did not discover the ring missing until several hours later.

A student's vehicle received $300 worth of damage in a hit-and-run accident in Lot No. 80.

Fifteen dollars, a drivers license and several credit cards were taken from a dental student's wallet when he left it in the shower room while he changed clothes to go swimming in the UB. The victim said he could not identify all the men in the room at the time but said he could recognize two of them.

Tues., Nov. 27. University Police recovered a stolen truck which was reported to them by IPD. The truck was left in Lot No. 89.

Police responded to a call at Krannert Science Building that a student had possibly taken an overdose of drugs. The student was coherent when police arrived and they transported him to Midtown Mental Health Clinic.

A student reported that when she returned to her vehicle after class, she discovered that someone had broken into it and stolen a flashlight and her hubcaps. This is the second time her vehicle had been broken into in Lot No. 37, she said.

Wed., Nov. 28. IFD and University Police answered a fire alarm in Riley Hospital. It was later discovered that the fire alarm on the 5th floor of the hospital had malfunctioned.

A Brownsburg man's auto was broken into in Lot No. 9. He reported that a $50 tire and a $95 set of airplane headphones were taken.

Thurs., Nov. 29. A patient at University Hospital reported that someone had taken $12 from her night stand next to her bed while she was asleep. No suspect(s) has been identified.

Fri., Nov. 30. A university professor reported that $180 was missing from his billfold which he left in his office at Krannert Building, Room 343. A housekeeping employee was questioned and stated that he was in the room but didn't take the money.

A student reported that he went to eat in the UB cafeteria and hung his jacket on a coat rack in the hallway. When the student returned the coat and other items in its pockets were missing.

Two juveniles were arrested by campus police for trespassing. The officers later learned that the youths were cutting school and they were transported to the Marion County Juvenile Center.

Sat., Dec. 1. IUPUI Police recovered a stolen van in Lot No. 78. The owner of the vehicle reported to IPD that the van had been missing a couple of days.

Police arrested a suspicious-looking man on the 6th floor of University Hospital. Further investigation revealed that the suspect had been stealing university property from the hospital and trying to steal bicycles outside.

An Indianapolis man was arrested for DWI in the 1100 block of W. Michigan St. The arrested man's speech was slurred and erratic officers reported. He consented to a breath test, testing .250. His vehicle was towed to a local garage.

Sun., Dec. 2. University Police making a routine check found a non-student sitting on the first floor of CA. A check by campus police showed that the suspect was told twice before not to enter university property again. He was arrested shortly thereafter for trespassing.

Police arrested an Indianapolis man for stealing household items from Riley Hospital. The suspect stole items as small as pencils to as large as mop heads and mop buckets.

Prejudice shows

To the Editor:

The employees of the McDonald's restaurant at 16th and Meridian Streets let their prejudice show last Thursday afternoon when a customer asked for a 57-cent-refund for a watery drink.

For the customer, the question did not concern race at all. However, the employees, who were all black, saw it differently. The incident turned out to be a nightmare for the customer.

Of course I am writing about myself, a reasonably sane IUPUI student. What happened was bizarre, to say the least.

I mentioned to the sales girl, behind the counter, that the large beverage was a bit watery. She took it from me and proceeded to let foam run over the brim of the cup for approximately four minutes.

I asked for a refund. Two minutes later the sales girl was still pouring the foam into the cup, and I asked for a refund again. I thought the problem would be solved when the manager arrived. I was wrong.

Suddenly a black customer made a comment about my race. Then the girl behind the counter added one. She was joined by the manager and the rest of the sales staff.

The manager did not know how much money to refund, and precious minutes ticked by. (I was on my way to class—you know, a final exam and all).

I couldn't believe the whole thing was happening. I left the restaurant with every member of the sales force (it seemed) yelling at me and threatening to hit me.

To make matters worse a customer followed me to the car, yelling comments all the way.

Just days before, I had met a lovely black woman who had spent hours exchanging information about her culture with me. This woman was not educated or wealthy. She was a street-woman.

In just a few hours I learned a great deal about life as a person of another race, while she learned from me. I thought, then, how wonderful that we had made such strides in human-relations.

The McDonald's incident made me realize that the customer is only right when the employees think so. It is too bad that people—of all races—think in color.

Sincerely,
Ima White

our view

A sad case, to be sure

Consider a small business owned by two very hard-working proprietors.

Consider a lazy worker who doesn't do anything but "sit around and loaf all day." The owners, naturally, want to fire her.

Once fired, said lazy worker can collect unemployment compensation, raising the rates her former employer must pay into a government unemployment compensation fund.

It works like this—the employer pays a certain percentage of his payroll to the unemployment division every year. If no one from that employer's business draws on the fund, the business' rates (on unemployment payments) stay low.

In essence, firing a lazy worker harms the employer, thus rewarding laziness and punishing inefficiency.

On top of that, an employer has little chance of arguing against a fired employee's right to collect unemployment—the law heavily favors the employee.

Consider a lousy system.

Good times, bad times

Another year has passed, and the Sagamore has continued to change....

We've discontinued the photo front and gone to, with a few exceptions, a news front each issue.

We've also changed in size, averaging a few pages less per issue than we did last year. We tried to make the paper's copy pertain not only to campus news, but also to issues and interests concerning IUPUI's unique student body.

Much credit must be given to the Sagamore staff. Underpaid, overworked and underappreciated, most staffers have found social and academic lives suffer substantially as the amount of time spent working at the Sag increases. Those working on the Sag receive no academic credit, but do gain invaluable experience.

Currently, the paper is undergoing some hard times financially. Unlike most student newspapers, the Sag gets no tuition dollars or university funding—outside of office space. The paper exists solely upon revenue generated from student-sold advertising.

Also, unlike most other student newspapers, we are without a full-time advisor to guide us through the "rough spots" of literally running a newspaper and small business with a skeleton crew. In essence, we are flying blind in both areas.

The Sagamore provides a service, free-of-charge, to both the student body and the university—we print university news and announcements which we consider valuable to the student body, and try to entertain and inform at the same time.

Sometimes we fail, but we like to think we succeed more often.

Academic credit should be given for work on the paper and we desperately need a knowledgeable and full-time advisor, who could in addition, serve as a member of the journalism department.

Profs dislike Sandy's test

To the Editor:

We hope that the final exams which Prof. Sandy's students are taking this week are constructed more logically and fairly than the "self-test" on faculty unions he offered in your last edition.

Having demonstrated (to his own satisfaction; not ours) that such unions don't increase faculty salaries, he then invites students to oppose them on the basis that they do increase salaries, and this by raising tuitions, reducing services, and the like. And having assumed that the administration does the best possible job in representing the university's needs to the Legislature, he then bemoans the scarcity of terminals, books, parking spaces, and just about everything else, from which this university suffers.

We take issue with the presupposition that any gain for faculty is accomplished at a loss to students. Funds for raising faculty salaries could come, for example, from general administrative funds, from the salaries of unnecessary administrators, or from the $312,000,000 surplus on which the Indiana Legislature is now sitting.

We likewise reject the supposition that "university needs" are best defined by and transmitted to the Legislature by the administration. There are so many issues like class size or frequency of offerings where faculty and student interests are diametrically opposed to those of the administration. How can one assume that the administration will be a neutral arbiter of these interests inside or outside the university?

Finally, we deplore the focus of this "controversy" on the wage question. For most of us, this issue pales in significance beside non-wage issues. But what else can one expect from a social science discipline which takes as its basic premise that individuals are self-interested income maximizers? As Richard Freeman and James Medoff state in the Fall 1979 issue of The Public Interest:

Economists today generally treat unions as monopolies whose sole function is to raise wages. Since monopolistic wage increases are socially deleterious—in that they can be expected to induce both inefficiency and inequality—most economic studies implicitly or explicitly judge unions as having a negative impact on the economy. ... Our research demonstrates that this view of unions whose chief function is to raise wages is seriously misleading. For in addition to raising wages, unions have significant non-wage effects which influence diverse aspects of modern industrial life.

There are rational grounds for unionizing in addition to those of self-interest. We invite those who feel as we do, to join us in solidarity to solve our mutual problems.

Sincerely,

Fund freeze in 'what if' stage

(IU News Bureau)—"At this stage it's a 'what if' situation as to what will happen next," said Professor Richard N. Farmer, chairman of the international business administration department at the Indiana University School of Business, commenting on President Carter's freeze of Iranian assets in this country.

"Carter's actions were taken to prevent the Iranians from creating chaos in the world monetary system," he said. "This is the first time the U.S. has ever blocked foreign dollar balances in peacetime. There are important implications, but too many elements in the picture are beyond our control; even to speculate on what will happen. It all depends on who does what next."

"It could be as disastrous as a world-wide depression or as mild as a minor perturbation in the world money market. It all depends on the foreign reaction. It's just too early to say."

Farmer questioned whether the Iranians could have withdrawn all their money as they had been threatening even if Carter had not intervened. He cited the difficulties of transferring such a large amount from U.S. banks to other countries.

"We're talking about a big chunk of money—an estimated $12 billion. The question is where would they put it?"

"There's a very real question of whether they possibly could do it, even if they wanted to. There's no place to go. Other strong currency countries probably would not be willing to go along with them."

Transferring such a sum to banks in any other country would drive the price of that country's currency sky-high, probably doubling prices for their goods on the world market, Farmer explained. This would result in a drastic effect on their trade with the rest of the world, and would affect the entire international world trade situation.

As an example, Farmer cited the theoretical case of the Iranians putting their money into German banks. The mark would soar, prices on goods from Germany would double, no one could afford anything from them, a big chunk of German industry would be wiped out and the delicately balanced system of world trade—built up over the last 40 years—would collapse.

The real implication was not the Iranians pulling out, but what the other foreign holders of U.S. dollars would do, according to Farmer.

"The stir was that: foreigners hold more than $450 billion U.S. dollars. If the Iranians withdrew their money, that would be a tip for everybody to run out. It is very similar to a bank run back in the Great Depression. If one man gets out and the others are nervous, they may all try to get out, at which point the bank is broke, and then the whole world international monetary system collapses."

—Congressional Insight—

Hill action won't begin until Iranian situation cools. Signals now are not to rush into hearings before the present crisis has been resolved, although that could change if things keep dragging on.

Then look for a rash of hearings by House and Senate panels on armed services, intelligence, international relations; also by less obvious panels with one interest or another: banking, commerce, energy and agriculture.

Common theme: How it happened, how it could have been prevented.

Some subjects that will receive priority attention: Banking. The role played by international banking interests in U.S. foreign policy will be a key focus. Though there is only scattered outright sympathy displayed presently for Iranian charges against the Chase Manhattan Bank, Chairman David Rockefeller and his friend Henry Kissinger, the matter of their involvement in Iran will come under scrutiny on Capitol Hill.

Embassy security. In addition to beefing up Marine Corps guard units, some members want the State Department to adopt a more aggressive embassy defense policy. Instead of bowing to mob action after an embassy's secrets have been destroyed, Rep. Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) wants Marines to fire on invaders. Sen. Howell Heflin (D-Ala.) proposes training and deploying a special quick-strike force especially for dealing with those hostage situations.

Students. There will be moves to crack down on foreigners studying in this country...not just Iranians. Rep. Glenn Anderson (D-Calif.) wants to allow deportation of those who take part in violent or illegal demonstrations without lengthy hearings. Rep. Thomas Evans (R-Del.) has introduced similar legislation. Rep. Bill Boner (D-Tenn.) proposes renewing student visas every year. Under present rules, visas can be issued for as long as five years. Sen. Walter Huddleston (D-Ky.) suggests federal sanctions be imposed on schools that do a poor job of keeping track of their foreign students.

Food. The use of food as a political weapon has been thoroughly discredited...but it's certain that extreme anti-American actions in Iran will be used to bring up the idea again. Conservative members especially are calling for a total trade embargo against Iran, which would include food.

Iran may damage approval of the SALT treaty. If hearings substantiate what so far have only been suspicions of Soviet involvement in whipping up anti-American sentiment in various parts of the Moslem world, it could spell the end of chances for the arms pact. Opponents like Senate GOP Whip Ted Stevens already link SALT with Iran.

Final action on SALT is virtually out of the question this year. Senate rules would allow debate to begin as early as Nov. 27. But several other matters, including windfall profits tax and Chrysler loan guarantees, will come first. When debate does start, the Senate won't want to rush.

Most likely target date for action now appears to be early February.

Congress would have a chance to second-guess military action in Iran through the War Powers Resolution, enacted in 1973 over the veto of then-President Nixon. The measure requires the president to consult with Congress in "every possible instance" before committing U.S. forces to hostilities. Congress could direct the president to disengage troops by a resolution. The current mood makes any kind of congressional censure unlikely.

Congress was last consulted by Ford during the Mayaguez incident, when Cambodians seized the American merchant ship and crew of 39 in 1975.

Ford's bold rescue action boosted his sagging ratings in the public opinion polls—for about two months. Then they resumed downward trend.

Hospital cost control will resurface this year or next. Sure bet despite the recent massive rejection by the House of Representatives. The Carter administration is determined not to let this health initiative die.

Vehicle probably will be a Russell Long health insurance bill. The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee is working on an insurance measure he hopes his committee will finish by the end of this year or early in 1980. Carter won't sign a health insurance measure without cost control.

On the health insurance measure now taking shape in the Senate: Carter wants more, Long wants less. They're working to compromise. So far both agree on some basics. The bill will be the first phase of a more comprehensive insurance plan to be devised in later years. For now, the measure will cover "catastrophic" illnesses...that is, benefits would be paid after a large deductible is satisfied. Costs of the program would be borne by employers. Also, the package will contain whatever cost control provisions Carter can get Long to agree on...also, some Medicare upgrading.

Lots of bargaining in Finance Committee sessions. Long's former aide on health matters, Dr. James Mongan, is representing White House interests in the meetings. There is visible give-and-take between him, pushing for more Medicaid reform, and Finance Committee health aide Jay Constantine, who seems to be carrying water for Long himself...offering extremely modest plans. Health insurance officials, sitting in the audience, are called to the microphone now and then to tell the panel what they do and don't like.

Long and Carter both want a bill before Kennedy enters the lists. The Massachusetts senator has a labor-backed draft bill that would cost a lot of money and would provide most Americans with "cradle-to-grave" coverage. On the House side, Commerce Health Subcommittee Chairman Henry A. Waxman (D-Calif) backs the Kennedy approach. A joint hearing with the Ways and Means Committee is set for Nov. 29, with HEW and top labor leaders testifying.

Service helps disabled, elderly

With the winter weather just ahead, Mayor William H. Hudnut today reminded Indianapolis senior citizens and handicapped persons that energy, food and transportation help is available to them if they need it.

"Heating bills will be going up rapidly in the months ahead, and persons with limited mobility may have difficulty getting food when the weather is bad," Hudnut said. "But there are certain social service agencies, as well as offices in City Hall, which can help the elderly and handicapped get through the winter season.

Hudnut said low-income elderly or disabled residents should apply for Project SAFE assistance, the state's new winter energy assistance program. The new program provides a maximum credit of $200 on winter heating bills for those who qualify. He said notices about the program have been sent out by the state and by the various organizations which deal with the elderly and the handicapped. The Mayor said persons living in Marion County can apply at the downtown offices of the Indianapolis Power and Light Company on Monument Circle, or at any of the following locations: Near Eastside Multi-Service Center, 2236 E. 10th; Flanner House, 2110 N. Illinois; Operation Late Start, 5147 N. College; Christamore House, 502 N. Tremont; Southwest Multi-Service Center, 5245 W. Regent; Beech Grove Senior Center, 602 Main (Beech Grove); Southwest Senior Citizens Center, 901 Shelby; ICLC Unity Conference, 2761 N. Sherman, 4460 Guion Road, 1701 Martindale, 1901 N. Harding; Mary Rigg Neighborhood Center, 1917 W. Morris; Concord Center, 17 W. Morris; Hawthorne Social Service Association, 2440 W. Ohio; Perry Senior Citizens Center, 6900 Derbyshire Road.

Hudnut also said that emergency food assistance can be obtained by those in need from the Metropolitan Center, 1505 N. Delaware. More information can be obtained by calling the Center at 637-3386.

Emergency transportation can be arranged by calling the Mayor's Office during working hours at 633-3714, or by dialing 911 in the evenings.

at IUPUI, and it dominated the work of the 1978-79 Student Assembly.

That year's SA worked on the mandatory fee issue from August, 1978, to early 1979. The fee was passed by the group and was given to the administration for consideration.

No further action on the fee has been reported.

•SBA/Brinkman: Student Body President Frank Brinkman lost his Student Bar Association seat in September because, according to the charges, he did not attend meetings or inform the the SBA of the reasons for not doing so.

Brinkman appealed the decision, and lost on the second vote, too.

•Circle City Circuit: The annual Circle City Circuit was held twice this year, once in the spring and again in the fall. Despite the move, some events—most notably the canoe race—suffered from a lack of interest and participation.

•Summer school: although students were mostly opposed, the Faculty Council voted to replace the two-session summer school with one eight-week session in efforts to combat the "budget crunch."

The most forgettable—or perhaps memorable—story of the year was the Student Assembly's approval of the Student Court—twice. The legality of the first vote was questioned and after much debate, the SA re-approved all seven members of the court in November.

Highlighting the year were winning seasons for the golf and fall tennis teams.

The women's volleyball team saw its second consecutive winning year with a 23-10 won/loss record, finishing third in the Little State Tournament.

In another plus for women's sports, Metros' basketball player Tina Masengale was named an All American by a scouting organization for the professional women's league.

The IUPUI Baseball team became a varsity team, and will start play this spring.

The SA passed the SPAC bill which created the Student Programs Advisory Committee and gave responsibility for funding of student programs to students.

Another SA bill called for moving the final class withdrawal date from before to after midterm exams.

The Irwin lunches were resumed in the fall after a semester's lull, giving students a chance to take their views to the administration.

Space and supervision problems at the Day Care Center surfaced. About $6,000 was spent on the center, but Dr. Glenn W. Irwin, jr., stated that expansion is still necessary.

IU was named the tenth largest university in the country, ranking third in the Big Ten.

The IUPUI-IPI controversy with the Indianapolis News was resolved, with the News agreeing to use IUPUI in its copy.

Construction on the campus abounded with two garages in the works, the Business/SPEA Building and Classroom Building Number 2 going up. The Indianapolis Sports Center was completed this summer.

Last—but not least—the faculty creamed the students, 11-4, in the Student-Faculty Softball game.

Funk says he likes 'Campus Crime'

To the Editor:

Unlike Professor Fredland, I find your detailed reporting of Campus Police activities a rather novel and interesting approach, at least on a short-term basis.

Certainly a complete list is more "true" than the usual media treatment, where a few lurid items are written up in great detail.

I think your column furnishes a better view of what our police officers do for us on a daily basis, and, in addition, reminds us to watch out for similar situations around the campus.

I will not defend the entertainment value or literary character of the feature. It is rather hard to read, and I find I glance at only selected items. For this reason, it may someday become "an idea whose time has gone."

But I do not think you should be criticized for giving it a try, especially when you may have trouble finding writers to dress up those items in better form.

Metros defeated by Ferris State

At the Ferris State Tournament, in Big Rapids, MI., the host school slipped past the IUPUI men in first round action, 84-77. Ferris State came out of the gate fast, piling up a 13-point lead, but the Metros clawed back to trail by only four at halftime, 41-37.

IUPUI came as close as three points several times in the last segment, but the Ferris Stators, led by senior forward Ed Howell, were able to shut off the rallies and hold on for the win. Howell poured in 35 points in the game.

Reggie Butler and Mike Herr shared Metro scoring honors with 20. Randy Wilkes connected for 10. The IUPUIers were out-muscled on the boards by Ferris State, 35-28, and also out-aimed from the floor, 58 percent to 51 percent.

On Saturday, the Metros played what Coach Mel Garland described as their "best all-around effort this year," walloping Concordia 95-74.

With Butler and Ron Angevine doing the bulk of the scoring, the Metros ran out to a 20-2 margin before Concordia realized what hit them. Holding a 42-26 edge at the break, the final outcome was never in doubt.

To ease the fuel usage in chilly Big Rapids, the Metro gang heated up the gym with their free throw shooting, bagging 23 of 26 tries. Concordia went 12-21 at the free throw line. Although the rebounding was fairly even, the Indy team far outshone their Wisconsin counterparts in field goal percentage, 55.4 percent to 45.7 percent.

Reggie Butler turned in a great effort again, matching his Friday output, 20 points, while ripping down 11 rebounds. Four other red-and-gold players ended up in double digits: Angevine and Joe Leonard with 17 apiece; Mike Herr with 16; and Kim King, 14.

Ron Beckett, Scott Donovan, and Larry Ingerson each had 14 points for Concordia.

The 5-3 Metros entertain a solid Hanover club tonight at 5 pm at MSA. Later, the reigning NBA champion Seattle Supersonics make their only Indianapolis appearance this year versus the Pacers.

Women's squad rips Marian

by Ann Miller

The IUPUI Basketball squads played a full schedule last weekend, with both teams placing third in their respective tournaments.

The Women Metros got off to a rough start in the Indianapolis Women's Basketball Classic as the host Butler Bulldogs pounded Coach Kathy Tucker's crew, 91-47. The IUPUIers rebounded on Saturday in fine fashion, ripping Marian College, 64-51, in the consolation.

The Metros suffered through a miserable shooting night on Friday, getting only 24 percent of their buckets to fall. Meanwhile, the extremely strong Butler quintet powered in 53 percent of their field goals, mostly on inside layups by talented freshman Beth Piependrink.

The former Indiana state all-star went 14-16 from the floor for 28 points and hauled down 16 rebounds. The Lady Bulldogs also got help from Barb Newman, 13 points, and Liz Skinner, 12 points.

Leading the way for the Metros was Tina Masengale, who sank 14 points and reeled in eight boards. Fresh guard Chyrell Saunders netted nine markers while Kathy Gaddie had six points and was high rebounder with 10.

The Metro Women fared much better shootingwise in the Marian clash, hitting 36 percent compared with the Lady Knights' 30 percent. Tucker's roundballers also had the edge at the charity stripe, 56 percent to 42 percent.

Barb Spears paced the IUPUIers with 17, and Gaddie contributed 13. Masengale came up with an "even dozen" for the day with 12 points and 12 rebounds.

The only Marian player in double figures was Tina Miller with 10. Kim Hermes collected 15 caroms for the Lady Knights.

Butler "Skinnered" Indiana Central alive in the title game, 78-48, with the formidable sister duet collectively getting 25 markers and 11 rebounds.

Piependrink was also a factor with 24 points. Nancy Thompson was high for ICU with 15.

Tina Masengale was joined on the all-tournament team by Butler's Piependrink (MVP), both Liz and Barb Skinner, plus ICU's Thompson.

On the injury list for the Women Metros is ace forward Judy Pluckebaum, who sustained a sprained ankle in Friday night's game against Butler. She is expected to be fully mended by the next game, the Jan. 5, 2 pm contest with Marion at the 64th Street Gym.

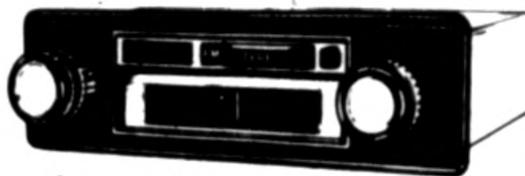

Three other home games follow: Jan. 9, 8 pm, Indiana Tech; Jan. 15, 7 pm, IU-Southeast; and Jan. 18, 7 pm, Franklin.

Ballet captures beauty

by Joni Steele

"Everyone is beautiful at the ballet."

Marvin Hamlich and Edward Kleban captured ballet's most beautiful aspect—its ability to allow those watching the beauty of ballet realize a beauty within themselves—when they wrote "At the Ballet," a lumpy girl's song of the only beauty in her life.

One of the oldest forms of dance, ballet seems to touch something common in peoples of all times and cultures—a desire to create and experience a certain grace through dance.

The Indianapolis Ballet Theatre, this city's only professional ballet company, deserves applaud and support for its efforts in nurturing the growth of Indianapolis art and culture.

Some may say there is little of the refined life to be found in Indianapolis and that "culture" is slow in coming to this city.

Maybe, but when it comes, it comes in quality. Witness IMA, the Herron Gallery, the Symphony Orchestra, the Repertory Theater, Clowes Hall and, of course, the Indianapolis Ballet Theatre.

Theatre, in that members of the company not only dance, but also act.

Intellectuals may be able to discuss the artistic merit of ballet well into the night, but those who must plead near-ignorance of the genre (including this reviewer) can easily find enjoyment in ballet—the beauty is that apparent.

The Ballet-Theatre's addition of theatrics to the dance only adds to its universal appeal.

Any so-called "uncultured" man off-the-streets with any natural predilection towards the arts at all could find humor and grace in its seaside spoof, "Movements for two Pianos," the IBT's opening performance at its Dec. 6-8 engagement at Northview Junior High School.

Dancers Dace Dindonia and Heather Brooks, among others, almost pranced through this charming vaudeville, looking like watercolor nymphs by Cezanne.

The IBT's wardrobe mistress never fails to perfectly match the spirit of the performance with the costumes and this "water" vaudeville was no exception.

Male dancers wore bold sailor shirts and white pants with their female counterparts dressed in flowing light-green costumes.

To music by Emmanuel Chabrier, the dancers often posed in such symmetric and balanced arrangements that one felt as if viewing still photography.

Upon cancellation of the Russian ballet dancers who were expected to join the IBT in its last engagement, the IBT engaged two other dancers, who in turn cancelled.

With that, Ingrid Fraley and Marie DeAngelo from the Jeffrey Ballet joined the IBT for stunning performances.

Fraley and Joseph Kerwin performed "Le Corsaire," music by Riccardo Drigo and choreography by Marina Petipa, called an "elegant showcase pas de deux."

In "The Flames of Paris," music by Boris Anafief, DeAngelo, paired with Michael Stephenson, twirled magnificently to spontaneous, enthusiastic applause and cries of "Bravo."

This extract from Anafief's 1932 ballet is based on the French Revolution.

"Gaillardes Galantes," choreographed by IBT member Dace Dindonia, continues her exceptional tradition of dances in the medieval style.

Set, costumes, music and dancing contribute to the medieval feeling, drawing the viewer into a fantasy of centuries past.

The Indianapolis Ballet Company strives for excellence and more often than not reaches it. It deserves community support of the same stature.

'Dead heads' die hard

by Kevin Strunk

All right, I'll admit it—I've become a die-hard Dead Head. I don't care to hear about space-rock, punk-rock, New Wave, your favorite disco band or whatever, I just want to hear more of the Grateful Dead.

Last Friday's Grateful Dead concert at the Convention Center did me in! Sign me up, I'm on the band wagon.

In town for the second time this year, the Dead played to a full house of wild, willing and crazed Dead Heads, all of them prepared for an evening's entertainment amply supplied by America's premier good-time boogie band.

When the band finally took the stage, they were greeted by an enthusiastic mob. The Dead had arrived.

For those of you out there who can't recall exactly who they are, here's a short history. The Grateful Dead started in San Francisco in the mid-'60s as "Mother McCree's Uptown Jug Champions," an experimental folk-blues-bluegrass band consisting of Jerry Garcia, Bob Wier, and Ron (Pigpen) McKernan.

Adding Bill Kreutzman and Phil Lesh in '65 and taking up electric music, the band, now known as the "Warlocks," started making the scene with Ken Kesey and the Merry Pranksters, playing in and around the San Francisco area.

The band helped organize the Golden Gate Park free concert series, changed their name to the Grateful Dead and joined up with concert

Mickey Hart. Things got hot and the band began making it big.

Keith and Donna Godchaux joined the band in the early '70s, a time that was marred by the death of Pigpen.

The band went into a period of rapid production of albums, both individual and group-related.

1975 was a total rest year for the Dead—they took the entire year off. Since then they've been at it again, releasing Terrapin Station, sometimes called their best album; "Skeletons Street" produced by the late great Lowell George of Little Feat fame, and a just-released album, entitled, Go to Heaven.

The Dead were joined by Brent Mydland on their latest album, replacing the Godchauxs.

Last time the Dead were in town (last February) was the first time I'd seen them. Going with some people who were not overly impressed (for some strange reason), I came home wanting to hear some more.

This time, preparations for the concert began well in advance. Friday evening found a wild group of people gathered together all up for the night's festivities. After listening to a few tracks of old Dead tunes, we all piled in "The Hearse" (actually, we all piled in "The Hearse" and made the trek downtown.

Arriving early as most people did, I found that nobody had gotten themselves crushed due to the festival seating arrangements, and indeed, reserve seating probably wouldn't work out at a Dead concert. My group alone had a good 25 Heads in it and many other similar groups, some waving banners, were situated in the audience.

The show started more or less on time and lasted for the better part of three hours.

The crowd loved it and the band seemed to be pretty much into the evening also. Hearing a collection of old Dead and new Dead, I got what I came for this time.

Going to see the Dead isn't like any other concert you go to—going to see the Dead is going to see the Dead.

Flat-out the best band in America today, these boys can do it up right. Show me a Dead Head and I'll show you someone who takes his music seriously. Dead Heads of the world, unite! Stamp out disco, stamp out Top 40, stamp out trash rock and roll, we want the Dead!

The Grateful Dead's fans are known as 'Dead Heads,' and many of them packed into the Convention Center last Friday to see their heroes. (Photo by John Porteus)

Records record 'power-pop' record

The Records
The Records
(Virgin VA-13130)

by David Edy

Most recently a new "style" of music evolved from rock's newest craze, new wave. The word style is in quotations because this new thing isn't much different from the old. This recent addition, "power-pop," seems to be more or less a new name for new wave, but it does have some slight differences.

New wave is a bit more angry and cutting. It is often made deliberately raw in sound and performance, and most of its artists eschew such niceties as tight harmony singing and lush production.

Power-pop, on the other hand, tries to sound more polished and its artists can sing and play their instruments rather well. Although they tend to stay away from controversial topics and lyrics, power-pop artists can be scathing at times (witness the lyrics of The Knack).

These artists also share the other components of new wave: the "rebellion," the excitement and the freshness. Power-pop is, after all, a mature new wave.

The Records, one of Virgin's newest discoveries, appear to be one of the more popular groups working in this style. The four man group works with extremely tight harmony vocals, trading off the lead vocals among three of the members. These harmony vocals are unusual considering the style of music they work with. But, because this type of singing is so unusual for new wave, it gives them a unique sound. The singing also edges them into the power-pop category, without too much argument.

The Records have also deliberately kept the vocal arrangements lush, almost in the same manner as the arrangements on most MOR songs. Slight touches and inflections keep the vocal work from descending into that particular area.

'Trilogy' molds myriad worlds

The Timeliner Trilogy
At the Narrow Passage
No Brother, No Friend
Vestiges of Time

Richard C. Meredith
 (Playboy Press, 1979)

by William A. Barton

Parallel worlds clash and collide as two alien forces attempt to re-mold a myriad of alternate Earths to their own benefit in Richard C. Meredith's science fiction epic, The Timeliner Trilogy, recently released by the Playboy Press.

Although the parallel world theme is nothing new to SF, nor the idea of forces attempting to remold those worlds to their own liking, Meredith handles the idea with the touch of a master.

He spins a story that is gripping and imaginative, combining swash-buckling adventure, mystery and speculation in a fashion to please even the non-SF fan.

The three books that make up the trilogy focus on the life of one Eric Mathers, Timeliner.

Mathers, originally born in a world in which Alexander the Great lived to establish a worldwide Greek empire, is, as story opens, in the employ of the Kriths, strange humanoid aliens, who are attempting to alter the future of the various worlds for the benefit of humankind and Krith to prevent a mysterious future disaster—or so they say.

While on assignment for the Kriths in a world in which the British and German empires are still fighting World War I in the '70s, Mathers is captured by a second group opposed to the Kriths and their Timeliners, the Paratimers, who cause him to begin to have doubts about the altruistic motives of the Kriths.

Mathers' escape and his subsequent struggle against both Kriths and Paratimers through the various timelines, aided by a mysterious force he calls The Shadowy Man, makes for a tense and exciting narrative that keeps the reader guessing—and turning pages—throughout the three volumes.

Meredith shows considerable skill in drawing up the character of Mathers.

Though he is a trained, skilled fighting man, Mathers still comes off as a very sympathetic, very human character. The reader cares what happens to him, and not just because he's the narrator.

Unfortunately, the rest of the many characters in the trilogy are not so well drawn, most being merely sketches for Mathers to play off.

The possible exception to this is Sally, a member of the American Republican Army fighting to throw off the yoke of the British, who becomes Mathers' love interest in the first book.

Still, Meredith does such a good job with Mathers and with the story, the insubstantiality of the other characters is hardly noticed.

Meredith's handling of alien environments and situations is also quite deft.

Even when Mathers is cloned into 377 replicates which combine into a super-entity, Meredith takes the reader right along rather than losing him in a sea of pseudo-scientific garbage, as is too often the case. His portrayal of the alien Krith Tromas—leaders of the Krith—is quite sympathetic as well.

Meredith is always one step ahead of the reader with his various twists and plot devices.

Just when you think you know what is coming next, you discover Meredith is a little wiser than you as a story-teller. His twists are never disappointing, either.

For example, the identity of the Shadowy Man seems obvious to everyone but Mathers right from his early appearances in the first volume. But Meredith shows you that things aren't always as they appear by proving everyone both right and wrong in the final revelation in volume three.

The only place where Meredith fails to completely satisfy is in the ambiguous origin of the Paratimers. By the end I still wasn't quite sure just what they were. This is a minor complaint, however, and offset by the rest of the work.

The Timeliner Trilogy was originally released in hardback by various publishers over a span of seven years. In the Playboy Press paperback version, Meredith was able to revise the trilogy so that it could be read all at once as one continuous story.

And it will take a strong willed reader not to do it that way.

Unfortunately, Richard C. Meredith died early this year, shortly after his work on this version of the trilogy. Based on the quality of The Timeliner Trilogy, his death is a sad loss to the field of science fiction. But he leaves behind a worthy monument in the form of one of the best SF adventures in recent years.

Moslems may be threat to West

I.U. News Bureau—From the Near East to Eastern Russia and parts of China, an estimated 900 million Moslems pose a potential political and economic threat to the Western World.

How real is the threat? Experts do not agree.

Victor Danner, associate professor of Near Eastern languages and literatures and of religious studies at IU-Bloomington, is an authority on Islam. He doubts that there is any great unified movement among Islamic nations to cut off relationships with the West.

He commented in an interview: "There are too many differences among Islamic nations for them to agree on one goal. Even among the Arab nations there is no unity. There is an incredible difference of opinion among the Jordanians, the Egyptians and the Syrians.

"Another point to be considered is that the Moslems have no reason to unite against the West. The Islamic nations, in general, have intelligent leaders who realize interdependence is the order of the day.

They need Western technology and, since the end of World War II, have sent their students to the United States and other Western nations to gain that technology. They must have it to repel colonialism.

Iran has been the leader in this with more students abroad than any other country, Danner said. "Thanks to the Shah of Iran, many Iranian students were able to come to the United States to study. The Iranian government paid their expenses."

Danner doubts the Ayatollah Khomeini will continue such widespread support for education abroad.

"If there is anything that unites the Moslem world, it is the Arab-Israeli issue and the backing of Israel by the United States. Some sort of resolution of this problem is urgent during this next decade or the United States will feel repercussions from the Islamic world."

Danner agrees that a unified

Islamic world could create tremendous political and economic impact on the Western World. In addition to having a major share of the world's supply of oil, there are bauxite and other essential raw materials needed by the West.

Moslems exist throughout the Euroasian land mass, in a large portion of Africa, Eastern Europe and, in fact, in large numbers on all the continents but the Americas. They are bound, to some extent, by their common religion, but even here there are some major differences.

The Ayatollah Khomeini, for example, and the Moslems of Iran belong to the Shiite branch of Islam, which comprises about 10 percent of the total number of Moslems. The majority belong to the Sunna group.

"The Shiites are a splinter group dating back to the founding of the Moslem faith 1,400 years ago," Danner said. It differs greatly from mainstream Islam.

One interesting political aspect of Moslem distribution is the fact that there are 50 to 60 million Moslems in the Soviet Union. Some experts on Soviet Moslems predict that by the turn of the century one out of three Soviets will be a Moslem, Danner said.

"For the past 60 years, the Soviet Union has been engaged in a massive Marxist-Leninist atheistic type of propaganda operation directed at the Soviet Moslems," Danner said.

"This has not hurt the Moslem movement in the Soviet Union. On the contrary, Islam is extremely vibrant and alive."

Referring again to a united Moslem front, Danner pointed out that there are areas of Islam that are mutually in conflict at times. They are separated by different languages, ethnic groups and histories.

There is also a widening separation between the Western-educated elite, many of whom are national leaders, and the great mass of Moslems who reject Western technology and culture and seek a return to a strict observance of Islamic laws.

Previously, the educated elite had things pretty much their own way, but there is increasing opposition to their regimes, Danner said.

Danner believes that, despite the rumblings from those who claim they want to return to strict Islamic law, the need for technology will win out.

"There are many responsible Moslems in this country who find that they can accept a kind of moderate, conservative culture. Many have come here to study and don't see our culture as one that has to be rejected."

Groundsman likes outdoor job, students

by Joni Steele

David Trevino smiles a lot. He works as a groundsman on the 38th St. campus and he likes his job.

"I like to be outside," says Trevino. "I can't stand inside jobs. Twenty-below weather, 90-degree weather—I'm outside."

Trevino's responsibility of keeping all the 38th Street Campus grounds in shape gives him plenty of opportunity to observe students. "IUPUI students are friendly," he says. "Very, very seldom do you find a nasty one—maybe one in 1,000."

However, the Mexican American quickly adds, "Whenever they leave their lights on or need a push, they come to me because I'm always here. I hope that's not the reason they like me," he laughs.

Trevino spends a lot of time in the winter helping handicapped students negotiate the wheelchair ramps. "Some of them just can't make it up the ramps—so I give them a push."

A new sidewalk and elevator being built at the Krannert Science Building should solve some of the handicapped students' problems, but Trevino is worrying now about how to keep students from parking their cars there and blocking the area.

David, Trevino's 11-year-old son, may someday join the students looking for his father's help in the parking lot.

Trevino says David wants to become a doctor and go to IUPUI. "I plan on helping him."

The 39-year-old groundsman moved to Indiana from Michigan 13 years ago with his wife and two children and has worked at IUPUI since then.

But he wants to go back to Michigan. Trevino, a man who loves the outdoors says, "No matter where you live in Michigan, there's a lake. You can go fishing and hunting."

Suddenly, Trevino, who has been leaning against his tractor, says he has to get back to work. And he smiles.
