University Library: How adequate is it?
Serious research
To the Editor:

From recent conversations and meetings with the Dean's Office, School of Science, Dean Steven G. Beering, Office of School of Medicine, Vice President Glenn W. Irwin and Director Mary Jane Lasts, Medical Science Library, I learned that we, as students, can gain access to the materials of the Medical Science Library.

Anyone can check out a text or serial through Inter-Library Loan from University Library or 38th Street Library. Also, if one can demonstrate a genuine and sincere need to have access to the stacks, one can apply for a temporary School of Medicine ID card to gain the privileges (which is a must with any type of serious research).

These services are definitely not well known throughout the campus, but do, nevertheless, exist for us to utilize in the professional manner to which we are accustomed. I strongly urge you all to make proper use of these facilities as need be.

Student Assembly?
To the Editor:

What is going on in the Student Assembly? Last year, when we didn't pay an activity fee, major films were shown in the Lecture Hall about every three weeks. Now that we're paying a $2.50 mandatory activity fee, not a single film has been scheduled. The main reason I didn't mind paying the $2.50 this semester was that I assumed we would be getting better movies along with other activities. What happened?

Offensive?
To the Editor:

I do not understand all the controversy surrounding the work of art in front of the University Library. It is certainly less offensive than other works of art.

One student, upon hearing a discussion of it, asked, "Where is it? I didn't even see it!" This certainly indicates that it is not cluttering up the landscape. In fact, its austerity allows an exercise of one's imagination. It can be made into something new every day, by everyone.

With all understated elegance of Oriental art, this work fulfills the true function of art, which is to stimulate the viewer's imagination.

As for practical suggestions, we could use the three beams as the basic poles for three Christmas trees, copying the idea of the Monument Circle's "World's Largest Christmas Tree." This would add a festive touch to our Christmas holiday season.

Then, in the spring, the poles could become Maypoles. We could attach ribbons and revive the ancient custom of the Maypole dance. In off-seasons, we could attach yellow ribbons and call them old oak trees.

Some of our young men could obtain those banners called traffic stoppers, string them from pole to pole and start a used car lot. Students who do not have clothes dryers could tie clotheslines to the poles and hang their wet laundry.

This would not be without artistic appeal, as the wash on the line could be construed as sailing ships. Too bad we let Columbus Day slip by. We could have called them the Nina, the Pinta and the Santa Maria.

What other work of art could lend itself to so many uses, offer so many possibilities? It is all things to all people. Our imaginations can soar, unlimited.

Kucinich offers ‘populist’ wisdom

by Barbara Koons

Predicting that President Jimmy Carter will win re-election in November, Dennis J. Kucinich, former mayor of Cleveland, displayed the flair for flamboyant speech and controversy that characterized his volatile term in office in a speech on the IUPUI campus last week. President Carter will win, Kucinich said, because of “the public’s fear of having Ronald Reagan’s finger on the nuclear defense trigger.”

Kucinich then slashed at both candidates, saying, “We have a choice of returning to the 19th century with Carter or the 18th century with Reagan.” Kucinich, 34, who became the youngest mayor of a major American city when he was elected in 1977, was defeated for re-election last year after a single tumultuous term. He is working on his autobiography and making a speaking tour. His appearance here was sponsored by the Student Political Science Association.

An attentive audience of all ages filled Lecture Hall, Room 100, where Kucinich spoke with an enthusiasm for involvement drawn from his own experience as Cleveland’s mayor. Kucinich urged public awareness and participation as the key to management of problems facing urban areas today, saying, “You are either a participant in the system or you are a victim.”

He said his years in office proved that “public control of government can and will happen where public consciousness is raised.” Kucinich, a Democrat who was elected mayor without party backing, got his start in politics at age 20 in an unsuccessful bid for a Cleveland City Council seat. Two years later he ran again for the same post and won, an office he held for six years.

The self-styled “Urban Populist” then served two years as clerk of courts immediately preceding his election as mayor. Alternately known as the “Boy Wonder” or “Dennis the Menace” by his supporters or foes, the term of office of the young, dark-haired, boyish-looking Kucinich marked a continuously running battle between his office and the Cleveland corporate power structure, banks, municipal utilities and the all-Democratic city council.

Always a political maverick, Kucinich earned a controversial reputation through such unorthodox moves as turning down millions in federal aid, laying off thousands of city employees and firing a popular police chief in the middle of a press conference. In discussing his skirmishes with the Cleveland power structure, Kucinich, a Cleveland native and son of a Croatian-American truck driver, said that the more time he spent in government, the more he became aware of the “un-elected government, a shadow government of powerful private interests.”

He said he began to wonder why his interests were always catered to while interests of people and the city went overlooked. This massive business corruption, he said, was the result of “worshipping the green god of the dollar bill.”

Citing that “public rights are not private loot,” Kucinich discussed why he refused to let the independent Municipal Light System, a small municipal electric company, be purchased by the much larger Cleveland Electric Illuminating Company.

This refusal was a major source of conflict which led to Cleveland’s default on a $18.5 million debt on total loans held by local banks.

The right of utility franchise is vested in the people," he said, adding, "If the people don’t own their own utilities, the utilities will soon own the people." As a result of his term in office, Kucinich thinks that Cleveland’s citizens know more about how their city works. If he had agreed to sell out to corporate interests, he contends he’d still be mayor of Cleveland.

Student Assembly prepares comprehensive syllabus file

by Dana Daugherty

Every semester, countless students experience the agony of enrolling in a class only to find that it isn’t quite what they expected. For those students who have desired class information prior to enrollment, the Student Assembly has nearly completed a comprehensive syllabus file of 100 to 200 level classes in the Schools of Business, Liberal Arts and Science.

Designed to help students plan their academic options, the syllabus file will include a brief description of each class objective, plus the numbers of tests, quizzes and papers required. Whenever possible, a list of required texts will appear.

"This will let students know beforehand what is expected in a class," says Tim Sullivan, co-syllabus coordinator. "In no way is this a teacher evaluation list."

Students can locate the syllabus, to be completed by spring pre-registration, in the library, along with other reserved material behind the desk.

Nicaraguan literacy rate rises

by Chris Brown

Education is one of the major aims of the revolution in Nicaragua, remarked Rev. Bernard Survil, as he spoke to an IUPUI audience last week.

Accompanying him were two Nicaraguan high school students, Ruben UUoa, 18, and Azucena Venegas, 16.

It has been almost a year and a half since President Somoza was ousted from Nicaragua, and, according to Survil, the illiteracy rate has dropped from 62 percent to 12 percent.

When Somoza was in power, remarked Survil, education was denied, and it was not unusual to work 12 hours a day for $2. It was "like working under an umbrella of death," explained UUoa.

When victory came to the Sandanistas on July 19, 1979, one of the first moves of the new government was the literacy crusade. Created was a literacy army made up of people from 14 to 22 years of age, along with teachers and some industrial workers, said Venegas.

She was a member of that army and went to the mountains to teach. There were many obstacles, Venegas added. Rumors had spread into the mountains that "we were communists and that we would steal their land. We had to convince them that this was not true," Venegas explained.

The education program is working through the Nicaraguan Department of Education with the aid of world experts, says Survil.

Somoza went on to say the American people really don’t understand the revolution. Most of this, he said, is due to the distortion of the news from Nicaragua by the media.

Many are trying to read into the revolution things that are not there, he maintains, adding, keywords, such as "terrorist," are edited into the news.

Survil has spent the last six years in Latin America. Before serving in Latin America, he spent four years in Indianapolis.

Library below 'minimum standards'

by Jim Beever

"The University needs it, the students need it and the faculty needs it," says Janet Matthews, university archivist, speaking of a new central library scheduled for funding in the '83-'86 budget request. If the budget is granted, IUPUI students could be using the new library by the 1985-86 school year.

Nevertheless, this raises some concern over the adequacy and ability of the present library to handle the campus need and increasing enrollment over the next five years.

At the present time, the University Libraries are below the minimum standards used by the Association of College and Research Libraries. The university needs roughly 300,000 volumes to meet these standards, at a cost of about $2 million, according to the 1976-'86 IUPUI Master Plan for Development.

The Master Plan further states that "both collections and capabilities manifest inadequacies. Problem areas include critical shortages of books and journals, of professional and supporting staff and of space and facilities."

University Library on the Michigan Street campus is 10 years old, relatively new for a library, but because of the rapid growth of the campus, it is felt that a new library is needed. The Master Plan points out that the present library will have to serve the university for several years, and the development of this facility should have a high priority in planning.

Since the publication of the Master Plan in 1976, steps have been taken to upgrade the library's holdings, including a significant increase in the book-buying budget. According to Frank Bonner, director of the university libraries, the book budget has increased $120,000 over last year for a total of about $328,000, representing 37 percent of the library's budget of approximately $886,000.

Last year 16,000 volumes were added to the library's collection, with 2,549 titles dropped and considered no longer current.

Bonner explains that this is an ongoing process of selection and refinement of the library materials, and even if the money were available now to bring the library up to standards, it would take some time.

"We need a new facility," he concludes, "but feels optimistic about the library's ability to handle campus growth. "Our most pressing concern is getting more staff," he concludes.

Matthews, who has been with IU since 1956, explains that University Library was originally built with federal funds as an undergraduate library, combining the holdings of the Graduate School of Social Work and the collection of the Extension Division of Liberal Arts.

According to Matthews, when University Library (formerly Blake Street Library) was in planning stages in 1965, there were at that time additional plans for future annexation when the first phase of construction was completed.

This design, however, encountered problems with the architects when the library was built, and those plans never materialized. Matthews contends the architects were more concerned with the appearance of the library rather than its utility. She added this was a result of a lack of consultation with the library director at that time.

"I think we could have had a first rate library on this site," said Matthews, "had the plans gone on as originally intended, or at least as we were led to believe back in those days."

Executive Dean Edward C. Moore assures, "Indiana University is undertaking a large-scale fund raising campaign, and we propose to ask for book money as our first priority."

Moore adds this money is especially needed by the Herron, Education and Science libraries because of the size of their facilities and current budgets. Regarding University Library, Moore maintains the facility is adequate, emphasizing that there are other alternatives and solutions to the problem of space at the library.

The critical problem for the library is books, according to Moore. "It is not a problem of space; it is not a problem of staff. It is a problem of getting money to buy books."

Neil Lantz, director of administrative affairs, explains that the overall plan for many years has been to centralize the IUPUI campus by bringing the School of Education (located at 902 N. Meridian St.) and the School of Physical Education (located on West 64th Street) onto the Michigan Street campus.

"These were priorities," says Lantz, "with no intent to diminish or disregard the importance of the library."

Responding to the Master Plan, Lantz comments, "When you talk of adequacy, you are talking about two things. One, you are talking about the physical facility. But, more importantly, you're talking about the library holdings."

According to Lantz, there have been improvements made in the library's collection since the Master Plan was issued.

Lantz added that each building project must meet with the approval of the Commission of Higher Education and the State Budget Agency. Then IU must compete with other institutions for General Assembly funding.

"Looking around at IUPUI," he concludes, "one would have to agree we have done fairly well. It needs to be kept in mind that any plan beyond the '81-'83 request, which has already gone in, is tentative and could be changed."

Bruce Cockburn
Humans
(Millennium BXLI-7752)

Humans, Bruck Cockburn’s latest release, provides a rather enjoyable listening experience, although it does not reach epic heights of musical perfection.

Cockburn carries a mellow sound throughout, adding a light touch of jazz. His talents on the guitar are obvious, but his vocals make Neil Young’s voice sound impressive.

Cockburn’s lack of voice and occasional blandness seriously mar Humans, but violinist Hugh Marsh does his best to spice up the proceedings.

Marsh’s work adds a commercial “Loggins and Messina” sound to Cockburn’s softer tunes. Nevertheless, it is impossible to completely bring them back to life.

The dismal atmosphere is further enhanced by the actual songs. “How I Spent My Fall Vacation” and “Facial Architecture” are gems. Not only can he not sing, but Cockburn cannot write either. The hardcore Cockburn fan should not despair.

RCA, in their kindness, is standing behind Humans, prepared to spend money. Evidently payola is not dead.

The casual listener, looking for party music to suit a small crowd, would find this album to be perfect. Otherwise, there is no reason to run to your record store to make this purchase.

You will regret it.

Beans maligned
by Julie Burke

“Beans, beans the magical fruit, the more you eat, the more you...” Enough said. That may indeed hold true for some folks, however, beans also provide for a great deal of energy via bodybuilding vitamins and minerals, nutrients and fiber.

Beans are also one of the most economical foods consumers can prepare today, as they top the list of foods that provide the most protein per dollar. (One cup of cooked or canned beans supplies 12 to 15 grams of vegetable protein, depending on the variety.)

Beans contain no cholesterol, unless animal fats are added in cooking. They are also low in sodium—good news for those on low-sodium or low-cholesterol diets.

Dried beans are relatively easy to prepare, although several things must be done before they are incorporated into a recipe. Beans must be washed and sorted before cooking. They must also be soaked before cooking.

There is a short-cut method to soaking. Bring the water-covered beans to a boil for two minutes, then remove them from the heat; let stand tightly covered for about one hour—the beans will then be ready for your favorite recipe. For the best flavor and most food value, use the soaking water in your recipe.

Each cup of dried beans will expand to about two and one-half cups of cooked beans. If the beans are to be incorporated in a casserole, they should be cooked until tender and then baked as directed.

Pressure cooking is a time-saver and a good way to prepare beans. If using a crockpot, it might be a good idea to cook the beans one hour before putting them into the crockpot.

The standard way to cook beans after soaking is to add six cups water, one teaspoon of shortening and two tablespoons of salt. Boil until tender.

For a more savory way to cook dried beans, try adding onion and garlic salt instead of table salt, three to four chicken bouillon cubes and one-fourth teaspoon pepper.

The beans should be simmered slowly to prevent skin breakage. By adding one tablespoon of oil to the water, foaming will be prevented. Any source of acid, such as tomatoes or vinegar will slow down cooking and should be added last. If beans are cooked in hard water, one-fourth teaspoon soda per pound can be added to cut down cooking time.

Beans can be stored indefinitely in their original package or in an air-tight container in a dry place. Cooked beans should be covered and kept refrigerated no more than five days. They can also be frozen up to six months. Additional moisture and seasoning may be added after freezing to restore flavor and consistency.

Almost all of the more popular beans can be grown here in Indiana. Lima, green, soy, blackeyed, navy and pinto beans are just a few of the beans types grown in Indiana backyards.

On the road...

The IUPUI Children’s Theater prepared to hit the road with a new touring show, Land of the Dragon. The company will travel to Plainfield, Anderson, Fortville, Gary, Lebanon and North Salem in the weekends to come. The final show of Land of the Dragon will be given Saturday, Jan. 31, at the Indianapolis Children’s Museum.

The Oriental fairy tale, written by Madge Miller and directed by Dr. Dorothy Webb, professor of speech, theater and communications, pits good against evil as Princess Jade Pure (Dotti Charles), Road Wanderer (Mike Renda) and three dragons fight for love, honor and power. The cast also includes IUPUI students Mark Femkas, Susan Roascrans, Mark Dessauer, Charlotte Battin, Dotti Peek, Diane Smith, Mary White and Annie Heimlich.

Costumes were created by Brenda Taylor of University Theater. Dragon sets were designed by Jim Walker. Assistant director and stage manager is Eric Bryant. The tour is made possible through grants provided by the Indiana Arts Commission.

Jim Walker, set designer for Land of the Dragon, a new Children’s Theater touring show, carefully packs Oriental stage flats. The company travelled to northern Indiana over the weekend to perform for a Kankakee Jr. High audience.

More Kucinich

(continued from page 4) today, "a living symbol of all that's wrong in politics." Although he did not comment on local Indianapolis issues, Kucinich's statements on a proposed Cleveland "people mover," an idea which has also been proposed here, drew laughter when he called it "a Disneyland construction designed to replace people's feet."

Tackling the issue with local ramifications for downtown construction, also drew audience reaction during a question-and-answer session. Calling it a form of socialism, Kucinich said he does not approve of tax breaks, because they usually are used to develop areas that would have been developed anyway under private financing.

"Why should middle-income people pay the taxes of the rich?" he asked. He was answered with cheers and applause. Without divulging his future political plans, he left the door open to the possibility of another term as mayor, saying he still considers himself involved in Cleveland's politics and intends to remain in his home community.

A survivor of an attempt to remove him from office through a re-call election mid-way through his administration, Kucinich said, "I won't be put out of my own town by some Wall Street drop-outs," leaving his listeners with no doubt that Dennis J. Kucinich intends to continue as a major factor on the Cleveland political scene.

Honors program in business offered

Oakel Hardy is a busy man these days. A full-time policeman from Columbus, Ind., he is also an honors student working on his degree in accounting through IUPUI's business honors program here at IUPUI. Combining a full-time job with honors coursework can be tough, but Hardy feels it is worth the effort. "The work is more difficult than the undergraduate program, but I feel I have gotten much more out of it," he comments. "I was planning on doing graduate work eventually and thought this would be a good way to get a head start on it," adds Hardy.

Elizabeth Chitiga, a native Rhodesian attending IUPUI under the auspices of the African-American Institute of the United Nations, expresses similar thoughts. "It's been everything that I expected and more," she says.

As might be expected from someone who is taking 16 hours of classes and doing six hours of independent research, she adds that it involves a lot of time. "I must manage my time very closely because every minute is valuable. Sometimes when I'm not doing something, I almost feel guilty."

The honors program allows superior undergraduates to do independent research and take graduate-level courses while working on their bachelor of science degree. Graduate courses taken, up to a limit of 24 hours, can count toward the completion of a master of business administration.

An informational meeting about the Business Honors Program for all interested students will be held Friday, Oct. 31, 1-2 p.m. in the University Library, Room 318. Program administrators will discuss what the program involves, qualifications, and getting advanced credit.

NOTIFICATION OF A SENIOR ADMINISTRATIVE POSITION AT PURDUE UNIVERSITY NORTH CENTRAL

Purdue University North Central is seeking a Vice Chancellor for Academic Services, who will function as chief academic officer with wide ranging responsibilities for associate degree programs, as well as limited baccalaureate and graduate programs. Applicants must have an earned doctorate and be a Purdue University staff member having had administrative experience involving University matters and faculty. University teaching experience and proven interest and effectiveness in teaching and the teaching process, particularly at the freshman-sophomore level, is also required.

The Purdue University North Central Campus is situated on 264 acres of rolling and wooded land and currently serves 2,200 students. The campus is conveniently located eight miles south of Lake Michigan near the cities of LaPorte, Michigan City and Valparaiso, which offer both urban and suburban living, excellent school systems and extensive recreational facilities in one of the fastest growing areas in Indiana.

Applications should be sent to Professor T. F. Brady, Chairman, Vice Chancellor for Academic Services Search Committee by October 31, 1980. Please include a complete vita and the names and addresses of at least three references. STUDENTS!

We now have several temporary assignments for full-time workers who can type 45 to 50 WPM and enjoy a variety of general office duties, including balancing and reconciliation of accounts.

We offer:
1. An opportunity to establish a working record and get your "foot in the door" at INB.
2. Possible options for summer employment or even permanent employment down the road.
3. Competitive starting salary for excellent working conditions.

The hours of the assignment would be from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday thru Friday and would last approximately 1 to 3 months.

Act Now in order to make a place for your future. Apply at the INB Tower on the 9th floor Monday thru Friday, 8-4:30 p.m.
