Increased enrollment causes crowded classrooms, burdened faculty

■ University officials attempt to put into play several options for solving the overcrowded conditions and shortage of faculty.

By AMY MORRIS
Staff Writer and
CHRIS RICKETT

With an increase of 3,000 students in the past two years, IUPUI administrators are being forced to deal with the problems of space limitations and faculty shortages.

This fall, 27,518 students enrolled in classes. Because of the lack of faculty and classroom space, many students are finding classes closed, according to William M. Plater, executive vice chancellor.

"I ended up having to go through final registration and didn't get any of the classes I wanted," said Brian Wills, a freshman in the University's Education Center.

"I ended up not being able to get into the classes I needed and got stuck with weekend classes," he added.

Next fall, the university plans to have in place a computer with a built-in waiting list,

"So if you want a class that is full, it will automatically put you on a waiting list, and notify you when there is an opening," Plater said.

Although some new faculty positions have been filled this year, Plater said university officials are conducting an ongoing search to find qualified instructors.

"It's a very complicated process, but our goal is to get the very best people we can find throughout the country or even the world," he said.

In January, the university will request money from the state legislature to create about 130 new full-time faculty positions, said Plater.

Another problem this campus faces is the shortage of available classroom space.

"At peak times, there is not an empty classroom on campus," Plater said.

The university is exploring options to make maximum use of the space currently available.

One plan being considered, said Plater, is improving the efficiency of classroom space by changing class scheduling. This adjustment would allow more sections of classes without increasing the number of classrooms.

"We have to have some agreement among schools on some standard starting times for classes, and length of classes so that we can schedule the space more efficiently," he said.

Additional requests to the General Assembly will be made for monies to either remodel or rebuild the Mary Cable Building.

Plater explained that the lack of structural improvement on this building was due to the fact that the university did not own the building until last year.

Administrators must determine which line of action would be most beneficial. No decision has been reached as yet.

Another option university officials are exploring is using more video equipment and computer hook-ups to allow students better access to education.

"I think that we can still give students a

After a summer of healing and fence mending, members of Student Government are ready to begin building the leadership it must have to effectively represent the student body.

"The cooperation between the members of the Committee of the Whole was greatly improved because of our workshops this summer," said David Benz, senior and president pro tem of the committee.

The committee was formed in May after increasing difficulties of the Student Government led the administration to conclude that the student body was without effective leadership, according to Mike Waggoner, director of student activities.

"The existing government needed to be allowed to save face. The committee was a solution that allowed for continued administrative recognition," Waggoner said.

State universities seek greater awareness

■ More opportunities a must for the future of the state's higher education system.

By MARIE CHMIELEWSKI

Access, success and quality mark the theme of IU's proposal for additional monies during the next biennium, and serve as a joint strategy among the state institutions in raising awareness in higher education.

IU will ask the state Legislature for an operating appropriations increase of $90.6 million to cover the 1991-93 budget. The General Assembly approved $326.4 million for the current fiscal year.

This is part one of a three-part series. Part two will deal with faculty and staff salary increases.

"You could be the best institution in the world, but if you didn't offer advanced opportunity you wouldn't be serving your constituencies," said Chancellor Gerald L. Bepko.

The operating appropriation request

in the proposal represents the university's commitment to work with the state to achieve specific goals by the year 2000.

The goals include:

- Access: to develop and enhance activities designed to increase access to higher education, including those traditionally underrepresented.
- Success: to provide students increasing opportunities for success by strengthening efforts to increase student retention and graduation rates.

• Quality: to ensure students receive educational experiences of premier quality.

Not only do these objectives apply to the IUPUI campus, but the presidents of all seven public colleges and universities are using this as a model for raising awareness in Indiana to place a sharper focus on higher education.

During a press conference last Friday, the presidents were on hand to discuss the importance of the state committing to access success and the quality of the state institutions.

"There's a real danger unless we move forward with our commitment to quality, that students tomorrow, children and grandchildren of those today won't have those [higher education] opportunities," said IU President Thomas Ehrlich.

"They will be short-changed," he added.

The initiative, called "A Commitment to Quality," marks the first time all seven state-related institutions have joined forces to increase awareness of higher education among Hoosiers.

New registrar welcomes challenge of record enrollment

Grove's first day

at Indiana University.

"His approach to the students right there was very personal instead of hiding in his office," she said.

Hired by a committee that included faculty, staff and a student representative, Grove was chosen for his high qualifications and his experience with the IU system, according to Nathan.

A former registrar at IU-South Bend, his familiarity with the IU computer system should help in his transition.

As the registrar, Grove will be dealing with students, faculty and staff from each school, as well as other administrative offices.

"Most offices don't deal with such a large number of people," Grove said. "I am an outgoing person and love to meet all kinds of people."

This year, Grove's job includes 27,518 student records for IUPUI and Columbus, a 3.3 percent increase over last year's enrollment.

Grove is also responsible for address changes, transcripts, coordinating and creating class schedules and determining student residency status.

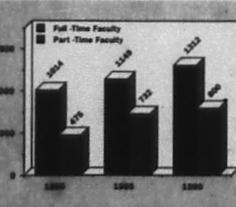

Originally from North Dakota, Grove said he and his family are delighted to be back in the Midwest.

"The chance to get together with family and friends is obviously much more available to us here and that is what we hoped for."

Signal lights fail to appear; students continue to dodge traffic

■ Signal lights that were promised by Aug. 21 will not be installed until the beginning of the spring semester.

By CHERYL MATTHEWS
Staff Writer

The installation of traffic lights at Michigan and Blackford and New York and Blackford streets slated for late August will not be completed until January 1991.

"It's really needed. I almost got hit once," said Mary O'Briant, a senior in the School of Education. "Those cars come faster sometimes than you

"We had hoped to have it done by now, but things never work out the way they're planned," said Peoni.

In the original plans, the light's design was to be completed last January, bids received in March and installation completed by May. That May date was later changed to Aug. 21.

The construction now only includes the underground work, such as the foundations and conduits, Peoni said.

"Then our people will come in and actually put in the signals," he added. "So the Dec. 14 date will be only for the underground work. Hopefully, we'll have everything in place by the time second semester starts."

In the interim, the IUPD has positioned officers at problem intersections during rush hours, said John Mulvey, chief of police.

These intersections include Michigan and Blackford streets, University Boulevard and Vermont Street and Patterson and New York streets, said Li Bill Abston, officer with the IUPD.

"Those are the ones that are our priority areas right now," Abston said.

Until the signal lights are installed, Abston said police officers will continue to direct traffic and get pedestrians across the streets safely.

Ball Residence dance welcomes students back to school

The Ball Residence Hall Association welcomed students back to school last Thursday by sponsoring a "get acquainted" dance.

"The purpose of this dance is for everyone to get to know each other," said Julie Fly, a senior and activity coordinator. "They do it every year."

Students were not charged admission.

About 150 students attended the dance, which lasted until midnight. Students do not have to live at Ball Residence Hall to attend.

The group will sponsor another dance to take place at the end of September. Students do not have to live at Ball Residence Hall to attend.

Natalie Cochran, residence hall adviser, said any events sponsored by the group is for all students.

"People just go to class or go home. It gives you the chance to meet other people. It's a real college campus," Cochran said.

The dance featured disc jockey Sunny Moon. Marion catered the dance with refreshments that were free to students.

"They (Marion) did a better job than Morrison's," Fly said.

School of Education, IPS send young students to international computer camp

IPS/UT send teachers and youngsters to international computer camp.

By CHERYL MATTHEWS

In a cooperative effort, the School of Education and the Indianapolis Public School system participated in an exchange program that sent two teachers and 10 students to the Ambassador Computer Camp in Penzheval-Zaleskiy, Soviet Union this summer.

The Ambassadors in Education program provided funds to support the teachers' trip, said Edward Robbins, associate professor of education.

These funds come through the Indiana Department of Commerce.

Their purpose is to make people in Indiana knowledgeable about people in the rest of the world," he said.

"The primary thing is that it is the way in which the university contributes to the community," Robbins said.

The IPSU Partnership is a joint venture between IU and 13 public school corporations, said Robbins.

"The base upon which we had made our appeal for use of the ambassador's money to support teachers was that as a result of this trip, they would establish an International Electronic Pen Pals Program," he said.

Some of the problems in setting up the exchange involved language barriers and the lack of computers in homes and schools in the Soviet Union, said Mark Mull, a fifth grade science teacher at Coates Grove Elementary School who participated in the program.

The Ambassadors in Technology Task Force put in a proposal to bring Soviet teachers to visit 10 schools within the partnership. They made contact with Alfred K. Aylamyan, director of the Soviet Programming Institute.

Aylamyan invited the Ambassadors in Education program to send the students, for whom the Soviet Union would pay all expenses, except airfare, to the Soviet Union. Indianapolis Junior High School teachers also participated in the exchange program.

The students spent three weeks in the camp learning about computers, how to use them, and their uses and cultural differences.

"The students' classes were mostly geared toward programming," Mull said. "For us, it worked out real well.

We had our eyes opened to the Soviet people, which was the biggest benefit that I received," he added.

takes as yet," Schilling said.

Research should be viewed as an experience for schools and it's desire to see the committee get involved with the business of effectively representing the students, Schilling added.

"Perhaps before this summer, this research was justified. It is probably time for the committee to push the committee to improve," said John Hakes, junior and Senator from the School of Liberal Arts.

Lack of support from the individual schools and the student body in general is also hampering the continued progress of the Student Government.

The schools of Allied Health, Community Studies, Education, Marketing, Science, and the Herron School of Art are still unrepresented on the Committee of the Whole, according to Benz.

The lack of student awareness about the Committee of the Whole is unique to this campus, Benz said.

"However, we do need to make ourselves more visible on campus," he said.

Our public relations committee is also part of the Committee of the Whole," he said.

"We're trying to offer an attractive program, with a lot of meat in it to raise the interest of the student body," said Wagner.

Since this leadership program includes Dale Carnegie leadership training, retreats and seminars will aid in the committee's visibility, he said.

Since this leadership program is established we will request that all student organizations send representatives and we will also open some sessions to all students," said Wagner.

While reorganizing and redefining its role on campus, the committee has established an agenda of programs designed to serve the students.

"We would like to set up a book store or a clearinghouse for used books, something to help the students," Schilling said.

"Also, removing the beams (small hills parallel to New York Street) from across the parking lot to improve safety is something we are looking into," he added.

Despite their past problems, the current committee is dedicated to serving the students of IUPUI, according to Benz.

"We're trying just like everyone else. We're learning," Benz said.

a more scientific and patient-oriented approach to surgery and health care delivery.

"One of the ultimate goals is to develop surgical guidelines for treatment of knee arthritis," Freudenthal said.

Doctoral students in SPEA will be helping the research team in the development of these guidelines.

Brenda Hughes, a part-time research assistant, is helping to develop a physician's database to aid in sending out requests for physician participation.

"We could not have done this project without the help of physicians around the state," Freudenthal said.

Other databases expected to be produced by this research project will be used to predict surgical success rates for patients and doctors.

One success story for IU is total knee replacement surgery in Vera English, a retired school teacher.

After three attempts to alleviate her pain, English sought the IU Medical Center and underwent a second total knee replacement surgery four months ago.

"I had a miracle; it occurred as I was as I concerned," English said. "Four months ago, I was in terrible pain. I am now pain-free."

"I'm a cancer person. I just respond to whatever I'm asked to do," she said. "I was thrilled that IU was chosen because of the reputation that was involved."

IU competed with 20 other grants, according to Freudenthal.

Through this experience, Hughes said she can now appreciate the concern of many of the areas involved in this kind of competition such as an undertaking.

"For me, it's a new opportunity that students have not had before. I'm not sure I would have a research project if I had not been here. I think that had we not gotten this grant," Hughes said.

"For us (doctoral students), the grant means research opportunities that we would not have had. One of the goals of the doctoral program is to prepare us not only for future teaching, but also research."

quality education by allowing those students to be admitted," Freudenthal said. "I don't know what we want to do with all of our classes that way, but by blending technology and new formats we will be able to use space more efficiently."

Local and national weekend College Fair classes held in area high schools offer possible solutions to alleviate crowded classrooms.

If enrollment continues to increase, IUPUI might have to turn students away in great numbers, said Peter.

"Although students may be eligible for admissions, if there is no room then we won't be able to admit them," he said.

Although the Board of Trustees set admission standards for the university, campus officials are beginning to implement stricter deadlines on admissions applications.

Although enrollment as a whole faces enrollment problems, some schools have not felt the effects.

"We haven't had any problems this year because we added classes last year in anticipation," said John Wenzko, assistant dean of student services at the Heron School of Art.

Classes Forming Now Not all MBA's are created equal.

Graduating from one of the better business schools can give you a competitive edge. And with twice as many people getting their MBA's today as 10 years ago, every advantage counts.

It's not surprising that enrollment in Kaplan's GMAT prep course has more than quadrupled in those 10 years. Students come to Kaplan to increase their GMAT scores and thereby better chances for getting into the school of your choice.

As a bonus, with Kaplan's GMAT prep, you'll receive refresher math lessons and business school admissions information.

"There is a core group of senators that are actively working to make our student government work, but there are not a few representatives who are not working with the committee to bring about the needed changes," Benz said.

"It is strangely coincidental that the senators who aren't in favor of the committee's actions are the ones who are rarely, if ever, present when business needs to be conducted," Wagoner said.

Students face unwanted burdens

Higher enrollments cause shortages, overcrowding

As enrollment continues to increase at IUPUI, many students may be finding it difficult, if not impossible, to get into classes.

Increased enrollment affects not only admission into classes, but all areas of the university—from parking, to hiring of faculty and staff.

In the past, increased student enrollment has been viewed as a positive step. It meant that more people were interested in obtaining a college education.

Presently, however, increased enrollment means overcrowded classrooms and a shortage of staff.

The total enrollment of IUPUI, including Columbus, reached 27,518 this year, which is nearly 1,000 more students than last year. Although this increase isn't as great as previous years, it still places a burden on students.

Classroom space, or the lack of it, is a major concern on campus. Many students are having to wait one or two semesters to get into basic courses. This is, in a sense, a catch-22 situation because many upper-level classes require taking these basic-level classes as prerequisites.

In the past, some classes have even been canceled due to the fact that no one was available to teach them.

The hiring of full- and part-time faculty is also an issue which must be taken into consideration when looking at increased enrollment.

It must be frustrating to those instructors who want to provide a quality education but are unable to do so because their classroom is overloaded and they aren't able to spend enough time with students on an individual basis.

IUPUI is funded primarily by monies allocated by the Indiana General Assembly, as is the same with the other state institutions. Every two years the university requests money for all aspects of the university, including faculty additions and construction of classrooms. However, this money only goes so far.

To date, internal reallocation has helped provide assistance in adding full-time faculty, according to Executive Vice Chancellor William M. Plaster. However, Plaster adds that the state must provide additional funds in order to catch up.

Until these funds are made available, one possible solution might include use of the Madame Walker Theater, which was used last year during the construction of Lecture Hall 101.

Another solution might be the expansion of the Learn and Shop and Weekend College programs to include more prerequisite courses.

The fact of increased enrollment should not affect the quality of education that students receive.

Former Student Government member calls for changes

To the Editor:

I have been, for the past several years a strong advocate of the concept of Student Government at IUPUI.

However, I write today as a critic of the system who feels that it should be abolished in the wake of its recent voluntary dissolution.

No constitution, no matter how well-written or well-organized, can guarantee an effective Student Government. As IUPUI itself students decide what such a body.

You know as well as I do that the number of students who truly care about such a thing are very few in number.

Even most of the elected and appointed members of the organization in past years have been generally disinterested.

As long as IUPUI remains a commuter campus, the likelihood of a strong Student Government taking charge and making a difference is small.

The bottom line is that the average student doesn't care. The only reason we need a Student Government at all is to interface with the administration, trustees, faculty and staff.

Why does it take a legislative body to do that? Why can't we just elect a president and some executive level officers and forget about the Student Senate?

If we must have a student government, however, let's keep track of a couple of things as we rewrite the constitution again.

If we don't require regular meetings and provide penalties for nonattendance, I would suggest that we do this for a year.

Also, we can provide for filling vacancies until we are blue in the face, but in the end, people have to run for office.

Let's also not forget that we can't just scrap the constitution like we have to the past.

To change or to replace it, there is a procedure and that procedure is agreed upon, it is the way the Student Government does business.

I think this might be a side benefit to offering a new constitution as an amendment to the old one, as we did before: this time, the school Student Councils would have to ratify it. Get

Professor says Student Government performs vital role

Student senators must understand function in order to better serve constituency

Student government at IUPUI is a vital part of our university.

An organization which represents students in its dealings with faculty, staff, community or constituency performs a vital role in any university.

Just how well it functions in that role should be of ongoing concern to faculty as well as to students.

Student Government appears to play a pivotal role in representing the students of a major university within the state.

With this in mind, we may well ask, just what makes an effective Student Government?

Student Government must understand its function. To determine the form or structure of an organization, one must first determine what it is that it is supposed to do.

It would appear that the Senate at IUPUI has in its overarching function that of representing students on this campus in deliberations with faculty and administration.

When a student senator represents a particular unit on campus, he or she must represent the interest of that unit. Beyond that however, the student senator must balance those particular interests with the larger concerns of the student body as a whole.

A good deal of the spade-work in our state Legislature is done in committee, so will most of the work of the student senate be done in smaller groups.

Organizing a committee and reporting back to the entire group suggests the manner in which meetings should be conducted.

Parliamentary procedure does more than simply assure order. It also provides for the efficient carrying of group decisions down in meetings.

Beyond the two basic principles of a majority of minors who don't understand their rights and are unable to articulate them effectively.

Student Government practices compromise individually. Not only must student senators understand their overarching function; they must be committed to it.

Politics has been described as the art of the possible. More often than not the possible requires compromise. And this refers to parliamentary procedures as well as to other methods of getting things done.

Even in larger meetings, parliamentary procedure must be seen as a means and not an end. An organization that ends up quibbling about whose rules is going to expense gridlock in facilitating a larger purpose.

What is often overlooked are the many varying interpretations of Roberts Rules of Order. Though there is general consensus on the essentials, there are many minor variations.

To facilitate understanding of the mechanics of student representation, student senators must strive to keep all lines of communication open.

These include lines with their immediate school, as well as with the student body. It means the members of a senate must be accessible.

Student government at IUPUI serves a vital function on our campus. To be effective, it should show evidence of several characteristics:

It should understand its function, proceed in orderly manner, practice compromise assiduously, and maintain open lines of communication.

Student misinterprets handprint vandalism*

To the Editor:

While climbing the steps of the Mary Coble building to attend my final semester here at IUPUI, I noticed two blue handprints adorning the concrete entrance way.

I thought it was a fabulous idea and that there should be more of them. Then I picked up a copy of the Sagamore to find that these colorful handprints were actually campus-wide acts of vandalism worth $3,500 in damage to the university.

For an uplifting, fleeting moment, I pictured a team of volunteers working together to clean up the mess they set in not yet open enough for me to see what I had hoped to see if the art school were moved here.

I would hope to see sterile concrete walls converted to easels for our talented Heron artists; I would hope to see student-made sculptures joining certain costly metal structures on the lawn in front of our library. I would like to see the students of Academic Building encouraging students rest, creativity, and yes, liberalism.

In light of this incident, I fear that IUPUI is just not "hip" enough yet.

I do commend them for a creative idea that took guts and a slightly silly sense of humor.

I also thank them for stirring my intellect enough to warrant writing this letter to the editor.

IUPUI's reaction to this incident verifies the opinion of many that the Heron School of Art should remain physically separate from the downtown campus.

If painted handprints are a shocker, then perhaps the hand-painted mural set in not yet open enough for me to see what I had hoped to see if the art school were moved here.

Tennis team unites, sets sights on district championships

■ Coach Ramirez is pleased and impressed with his team's 73 victory over Grace College.

By DAVID HARTLAUB
Staff Writer

In 16 years of competition, no tennis team at IUPUI has ever won the District 21 championship.

Yet, "winning the district is all we (the team) can think about," said third-year coach Joe Ramirez.

Last Thursday, the men's team won its second game against Grace College, 7-2, in midday heat.

"This was very respectable to myself and the other team," said Ramirez.

"This is a sign of good things. I am very pleased and impressed," he added.

Ramirez said he is pleased with what he's seen so far this season and said he expects the best from all of the team members.

"If this (the win over Grace) is any indication of what the team can do, we should be strong during the district," said Ramirez.

He naturally expects a lot from George Adams, but since we're a team I'm expecting a lot from everyone," he added.

Adams, a senior, returns this year looking to defend his District 21 singles title.

Ramirez said he only keeps the team's play held up throughout the year.

Mize added that the unity of the team is commended by a strong bond between the two varsity players.

"Seven of us have been around a long time," he said.

"We work hard on the court and go against our own as well. We've become more than just friends. We are more like family," he added.

Spikers plan this season's strategies

■ Coach says new players need to become familiar with the IUPUI volleyball program.

By ROBERT McFADDEN

The IUPUI women's volleyball team has several new faces for 1990-91.

"It will take some time for the girls to get used to playing with one another and knowing how each person plays," said Tim Tamm, coach.

There are six new players, four of which are transfer students.

One player is Estelle Armbruster,

a senior transfer student from the University of Louisville.

"She is a very good player," said the team's Brown said.

"She is very experienced, very smart and a physically talented player," he added.

Armbruster said she is pleased with how easy her transfer to IUPUI has gone.

"Everyone has been very accepting," she said. "We are settling in well together."

"I think we are at a good point leading into the season," said Armbruster.

Other transfers include Jennifer Kratzer from Indiana State University, and Melinda Esomine, from Midway Junior College in Kentucky.

Another addition is sophomore Kim Clifton, a walk-on with freshman eligibility, according to Brown.

The new player's experience will be aided by the experience of returning players sophomores Monica Ramsey, Gina Matzner and Jessica Noeke.

However, the team will be faced with the team's lack of depth and the injuries suffered by freshman Laura Mozer and senior Pam Hallaway.

"Mozer and Hallaway were injured," Brown said.

"I think we are at a good point leading into the season," said Armbruster.

A recent injury to team leader Hallaway left a void in the team, according to Brown.

Hallaway dislocated her knee in the Metro alumnae match in August and Brown said she will be out for the year.

Brown also said the team lost all-around player Becky Vogelgesang to graduation.

"Becky was one of the top hitters in the district last year and she was also a player-of-the-year candidate," Brown said.

The Lady Metros will strive to improve upon last season's 31-13 record and second-place finish in the District 21 tournament.

"The goal for this year, as for every year, is to win the district and qualify for nationals," Brown said.

The team hasn't won the district since 1988 and its last trip to the national tournaments was in 1985.

Southern band offers blend of traditional and pop sounds

■ Dreams So Real combines social issues with top forty musical scoring.

By MIKE PERKINS
Staff Writer

The second album from the up and coming band Dreams So Real combines traditional folk sounds with contemporary pop stylings and a strong sense of social consciousness.

This may seem like a lot of elements to combine, but the group that formed three years ago in Athens, Ga., manages to pull it off.

Since the group focuses on creating a somewhat dance oriented sound, the social messages take a back seat and do not interrupt the musical tableau the band creates.

Lyrics and music blend, forming a rich tapestry comprised of elements of psychedelic pop, hard rock and top forty.

Book gives insight, tips on interviewing and resume preparation for recent college graduates

■ Preparing for the job market is made easier with tips from professionals.

By MIKE PERKINS
Staff Writer

Job-hunting in the age of high-tech resumes and fast-talking interviews has become an art within itself.

In fact, it's so complicated that a systematic road-map explaining the ins and outs of the whole ordeal to novices is in order.

This road map comes in the form of a new book by Melvin W. Donaho and John L. Meyers titled simply How to Get the Job You Want (Prentice Hall Press, available at Border's Bookstore). Written tightly and plainly, this book

The group has a sound similar to the Georgia Satellites, but with a softer edge, leaning more to the pop/alternative venue than hard rock or the wild rock a billy that usually comes from bands with southern roots.

Gloryline, the group's second album, is an amalgamation of down home guitar strumming and synthesized dance scores.

The title track of the same name tells of a child's awakening to racial prejudice.

Generally, deeper themes of this nature have been left to the traditional folk and alternative artists such as Suzanne Vega, Tracy Chapman and Michelle Shocked.

What separates Dreams So Real from performers of this nature is that their focus remains on the sound rather than the message.

However, the message seems a little bit out of place when it is combined with the upbeat, pop chart sound the group achieves.

But this is only a small criticism. The album as a whole comes across well for a fairly new band. The tracks on Gloryline are upbeat, yet retain a relaxed, laid-back quality that is really quite appealing.

The only problem with Gloryline is that all of the songs take on the same sound, so by the time you get to side two, most of the tracks begin sounding the same.

But this is not really so bad since the sound the group achieves is pleasing.

Listening to Dreams So Real is like sitting watching reruns of Andy Griffith on M-TV.

The group also offers a re-interpretation of "Day By Day," the early seventies pop classic by Badfinger.

A point of interest about the cut "Stand Tall" is that it features back up vocals by Cindy Wilson of the B-52's.

Wilson's appearance is appropriate since at times the album sounds like a coarser version of the B-52's.

Also, intricate vocal arrangements and the sounds of a Hammond organ

give Dreams So Real a somewhat B-52ish sound.

Also, Wilson and the rest of the B-52's come from and started in Athens, Ga.

While the B-52's tend to be a more of a party pop group, their musical influences are evident in Dreams So Real.

Overall, Gloryline is a decent album.

It is somewhat flat at times and seems to trying to hard at others, but this can be true with any group.

And the sound is just middle-of-the-road for most musical palettes.

"IF YOU NEED TO WORK TO GET THROUGH SCHOOL, YOU NEED TO SEE UPS."

WORKING FOR STUDENTS WHO WORK FOR US.

UPS DELIVERS EDUCATION

"I need two things to get through school: good grades and money. I can take care of the first all by myself, and UPS is helping me take care of the second. They gave me a part-time job that really pays.

"I make almost $10,000 a year for working about 4 hours a day, 5 days a week. But get this, UPS has student loans that let me borrow up to $25,000 a year for college. Compare that anywhere else. I also got my choice of schedules—mornings, afternoons or nights. My work hours fit around my class hours. Most students work in Operations. But you might get something in Accounting, Industrial Engineering, I.S. or Customer Service.

"No other company offers more to students than UPS. Talk to them. Get what you need to get your diploma."

Come and visit us at IUPUI Student Employment Fair, Tuesday, September 11th from 11am to 3pm. All IUPUI students must register with Career and Employment Services BUS/SPEA Rm 2010.
