Election campaigners near blows over posters

Students vote, tempers flare as several campaign members throw accusations at each other.

By Jason Hall
The Sagamore

After signing an agreement to keep student elections clean, several Undergraduate Student Assembly candidates were involved in mudslinging, during the week of voting.

Mike Wagoner, director of student activities, and the Election Committee scheduled a private meeting early Thursday morning to discuss "an unusual number of grievances all filed on one."

After the meeting, the committee would not discuss what the grievances entailed, however, some of the candidates spoke of the election problems.

According to Thomas Mulcahy, vice presidential candidate on the Team Diversity ticket, the complaints centered around Craig Cooper, presidential candidate on the Student's Choice ticket.

"We found some of our posters defaced with Student's Choice stickers," Mulcahy said.

After the defaced posters were found, they were brought back to the Student Activities Center, where Cooper and Bruce Beal, presidential candidate on the Politically Incorrect ticket, were hanging out.

"Cooper denied he was responsible for this," Mulcahy added.

Then a fight almost occurred.

According to Beal and Mulcahy, the incident was halted before any punches were thrown.

"Had I not intervened, Craig and Tom would have struck each other," Beal said.

Beal said he felt his campaign strategy had been positive up to that incident.

But, last Thursday, he decided to hang a poster in Cavanaugh Hall containing negative information about Cooper's campaign strategies from last year.

One of the issues displayed was parking. According to Beal, Cooper said he would raise the parking situation, he would raise parking fees threefold.

Beal also touched on Cooper's feelings about the election process. The poster stated Cooper felt the only way he could lose this year's election was if foul play was involved, said Beal. He wrote that Cooper might sue if he were to lose.

The poster was later removed by the Election Committee. Beal said he followed every rule required of him and felt his First Amendment rights had been violated.

"The Election Committee removed the sign for two reasons, I feel, based on complaints from Craig Cooper," Beal explained.

"Number one, it was stamped incorrectly and number two, content," he added.

The Election Committee refused to return the poster to Beal.

Wagoner would not comment on specific issues of the grievances, although he did say what is happening is not "out of the ordinary."

"Verbal assaults happen all the time," Wagoner said.

Even though they are common, if anyone is found guilty of any wrongdoing, there is a wide variety of things that could happen, said Wagoner.

"Anything from being reprimanded to being disqualified from the race is possible," he said.

Benjamin Hunter, current vice president of the USA, said "emotions are just running high and the incident is being looked into. Everyone will be treated fairly."

Mulcahy had a different view.

"Craig Cooper is the only one not running a positive campaign, and I am insulted to be in the same race as him," said Mulcahy.

The Sagamore tried to contact Cooper several times, however, he refused to comment on the subject.

Man robbed, beaten at gunpoint in university lot

Student reports attack and theft while walking to car on campus police.

By Brian Moore
The Sagamore

An IUPUI student reported he was robbed at gunpoint on April 8 at approximately 6:15 p.m. in parking lot 59.

Approximately $1,750 worth of cash and personal items were claimed lost by the victim.

According to police documents, the student was approaching his vehicle when a black Ford LTD approached and stopped nearby.

Two suspects exited the rear of the vehicle, attacked him and then demanded his necklace, the report said.

The victim stated he refused to give up any jewelry and proceeded to struggle with the two suspects until the driver and passenger exited the vehicle and displayed a gun.

The student then gave the suspects his necklace and money.

Afterward, he said he was attacked again.

Following the struggle, the victim said the suspects entered the vehicle and left westbound on Vermont Street.

According to reports, the student was struck in the face and kicked in the chest, back and ribs by two of the suspects.

IU Police Department Sergeant Max Reynolds, investigating officer, said the search for suspects continues.

"At this point I'm just checking for any other robberies that occurred around that time," he said.

Although the incident took place during daylight hours, Reynolds advised students to walk in groups or use the campus escort service.

He also said the incident was out of the ordinary for IUPUI.

"We've had nothing like this recently," Reynolds said.

Anyone with information pertaining to this case should call Reynolds at 274-2058.

Events focus on violence

Campus organizations schedule activities in relation to Assault Victim's Awareness Month.

By Dan Aaron
The Sagamore

IUPUI is responding to April's National Assault Victim's Awareness Month by featuring workshops, presentations and speakers on violence related issues.

Rachel McIntosh, secretary of the Undergraduate Student Assembly, played a major role in scheduling events for this week.

McIntosh said she hopes the events will bring greater awareness of problems associated with rape, domestic violence and child abuse to students and Indianapolis' surrounding areas.

McIntosh

Her mother, Patricia McIntosh, will speak as a survivor of rape in the Student Activities Center at 1 p.m. April 8.

The workshop is called, "Breaking Free."

"She's going to be talking about the importance of seeking healing," said Rachel. "If you don't seek healing you're going to have to later on in life."

hopes to teach students to avoid violent confrontations not just on campus, but where they live, according to Lt. Bob True.

"We'll be introducing a safety-defense course called RAD (Rape Aggression Defense)," said True. "It teaches how to stay safe and stay out of sexual assault situations. And, it actually teaches some self-defense."

The course, scheduled to take place this summer, is designed to introduce a 16 hour class. Twelve hours are devoted to teaching avoidance and risk reduction with the last four hours concentrating on self-defense.

Mary M. Von Burg, president of the Domestic Violence Network, said she believes these issues are relevant to students of higher education because many students have grown up in violent situations.

"If they've grown up in a violent situation, chances are they're going to be violent themselves," Von Burg said.

Workshops, presentations and speaking events will occur this week at the following times and locations:

■ The IU Police Department will conduct two RAD workshops April 15 and 16 from 12:30 to 1:15 p.m. at the SAC, Room LY 115.

■ The Wing Tsun martial arts club will give demonstrations in self-defense April 15 and 17 from 4 to 5 p.m. at the SAC, Room LY 115.

■ A panel discussion on assault victim's awareness will take place April 17 from 8 to 10 p.m. at the Ball Residence Hall.

■ April 15 through April 16 at

Norris the Victorious

IUPUI student, Jamie Norris, crowned the 1996 Indianapolis 500 Festival Queen March 23.

By Jennifer Kay Ruple
The Sagamore

She reaches into the fish bowl, donning a floor-length, red sequined gown and pulls out a slip of paper.

She reads it, then hands it to the announcer as she steps up to the microphone.

"Why do you think you would be the best 500 queen?" the announcer asks aloud.

Jamie nervously looked out at more than 550 people watching, avoiding eye contact with her family and boyfriend seated in front.

"All the girls seated behind me deserve to be queen and are all qualified," she replies. "And, if queen, my main focus would be the children's activities involved with the 500 because we can learn a lot from them."

Jamie Norris, senior majoring in nursing and psychology, sits down with the other 33 princesses dealing with the knots in her stomach wondering what she should and shouldn't have said when she answered.

Norris is one of 10 finalists for the 1996 Indianapolis 500 Festival Queen in the Queen Coronation Pageant at Circle Theatre downtown March 23.

After waiting 15 minutes, she arises from her chair and stands with the other nine finalists on stage, holding the hands of each beside her.

The drum roll begins.

The announcer calls off the names of the princesses in the queens court. There are four.

"After they named off the fourth court member, I thought there was no way," said Norris. "I didn't think I would be picked. I just wanted to make the court."

She said she wasn't nervous at this point because "everything had already been decided. Whatever happens, happens."

She was still trying not to look at her family.

"When they called my name as queen, I just about fell over," said Norris. "I could see my dad jump up and all my friends and family in front were begging, clapping and things like that. I cried."

"What was so neat and what really got to me that made me cry even more is when they brought out the crown," she added.

Norris said the story of the crown was told earlier that day. The crown has been passed to each 500 queen since 1959.

"I mean, only 37 women have worn this crown and I am one of them," said Norris.

She said earlier that day, the coordinators of the event briefed the princesses on the evening's festivities.

"The funny thing was, I forgot they told us if we won queen, to walk up and down the stage and wave," said Norris. "I just stood there, crying. I just cried, everything made me cry."

Diana Brobst, 500 Festival director of public relations, said it was "obvious why Jamie was selected."

"She is extremely intelligent, double majoring in nursing and psychology," said Brobst. "She is a natural as a speaker and communicator. She has a heart of gold."

"On top of all that," Brobst added, "she is beautiful and poised."

According to the 500 Festival, all 33 candidates were judged upon their interviewing skills, personality, poise and overall appearance.

Jamie said although it was "nervetracking" throughout the selection process of princesses and queen, she just tried to be herself.

"We all tried to be really natural, none of us are perfect and the judges knew that," said Norris. "They would know if we were being fake."

Along with Norris, two IUPUI students, Laura Frazier, freshman majoring in Allied Health, and Allison Trainer, freshman in exploratory studies, were named as princesses.

Both were unavailable for comment.

The queen and her court's primary responsibility is to act as 500 Festival ambassadors throughout the month of May.

They will attend festival events such as Kid's Day, the Mayor's breakfast, the 500 parade and the race itself.

"I get to kiss the winner and give them their milk," said Norris. "My luck, Lynn St. James will win and I'll have to kiss her."

Norris won a $4,000 scholarship

New student government may face unresolved issues

Proposals involving student space in the old library need attention.

By Dan Sharp
The Sagamore

As the reins of the student government are passed down to two new issues remaining from the last term. The leadership skills of incoming officers will be tested as they try to deal with these unresolved problems in a way that best represents student opinion.

The most recent of these issues deals with a proposal made by Scott Evenbeck, assistant vice chancellor of the Undergraduate Education Center.

The proposal was made to consider using space on the first floor of the old library, currently part of the Undergraduate Student Assembly, for use in the faculty mentoring program.

According to Kit Foster, associate director of the Undergraduate Education Center, what the faculty was looking for was a classroom-sized room where the first-year seminars could be located.

In considering the old library for the placement of this program, Foster said the faculty wanted to have it "somewhere in the heart of the campus, a space that students would gravitate toward in their first year."

Todd Schmidt, president of the Undergraduate Student Assembly, expressed his concern on this issue. He said he acknowledges that "the mentoring program needs the space in order to better serve the students."

But, he said he believes by moving the program up to the first floor it would create more problems than it would solve.

"Student space is already scheduled heavily," Schmidt said.

He added he is concerned that the administration should inform students of their intentions before making any decisions.

A failure to do this "would be viewed as infringement on space from Borg-Warner Corp., a new wardrobe from J.C. Penney and many other gifts for winning the crown.

"My school is pretty much paid for next year," said Norris. "After graduating, I eventually want to go into pharmaceutical sales or genetic counseling."

She said she expects to get more confidence out of this experience.

"I'll be better able to speak to people, handle job interviews and make so many connections," said

Norris. "That's horrible to say, but that's how life is."

"With the involvement I'll have in the 500 this year, I hope to come back and volunteer in years to come," she added.

Norris said it's surprising how much more people listen when you have that crown.

She said her boyfriend and family are very proud of her accomplishments and courage to apply for the pageant.

"I was proud, very proud of her," said Ryan Doughty, Norris' boyfriend of six months.

"I tell everyone about it. I brag all the time," he added.

that is inadequate to begin with," Schmidt said.

Foster agreed space was a problem everywhere on campus.

"We certainly don't want to take away any student space," she said. "We want to add to the space available to students through the mentoring program."

While the situation currently remains unresolved, Schmidt said he is most concerned with the administration's timing of the proposal.

"Toward the end of the semester, the student government is going through a transition. Current officers are leaving and new officers are coming in," he said. "If the administration wanted to make changes, it would be hard for us to advocate student interests to the best of our ability."

Schmidt said he believes the situation warrants monitoring — in case the issue is raised again closer to the end of the semester. This is a time when a less experienced student government will be involved.

"If they were caught up in this without any background, they might be swayed in a way that would have a negative effect further down the line," he said.

To inform incoming officers about issues such as this, Schmidt explained during the transition period "we have workshops and individualized meetings with the officers to let them know what the major issues are, the problems we faced and suggested solutions."

Softball rookies showing off potential

Lack of position players has forced young talent to step up and help out where they are needed most.

By Brian Hendrickson
The Sagamore

The outlook for the Lady Metros softball team was not bright earlier in the year with only four returning players from last year's team, none of whom were pitchers or catchers. Despite dropping four straight games, including two against St. Xavier which were played in 30-de-gre weather with a five-to-six-degree wind chill, the team is about where first-year coach Kris Risley expected — holding a 7-13 record. "I hoped we would be closer to .500, and we were for a while and just had a little bit of a bad stretch the last couple of games," Risley said. "We keep having these runs where we win four in a row, we lose four in a row. So according to the schedule we're due to win four in a row now," he continued.

With all the young talent on the team, mistakes have been made while the inexperienced players have learned to play as a team. They have committed 51 errors so far this season, leading to 35 unearned runs. "Softball is a lot of individual players, but you still have to be a team. They have to learn how to do that."

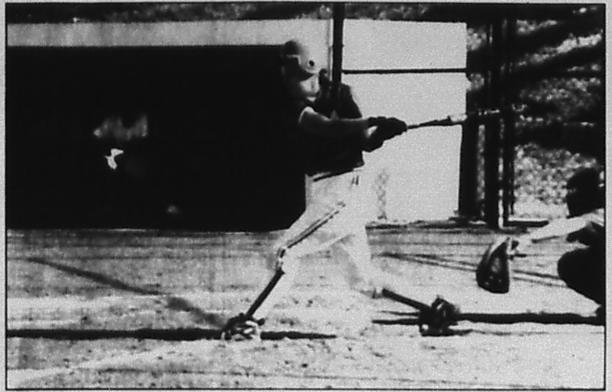

One player who is having few problems picking up the game has been freshman Kasie Childress. Childress has been the team's hottest hitter lately with a .385 average, while filling in as the team's third starting pitcher. "She's a pitcher, but she seems to be hitting better lately than anybody," said Risley.

"(Childress has) had some innings where she could really put the ball by them and was hardly touched," he added. Junior Nicole Croddy, who also played on the Lady Metros basketball team where she averaged 2.6 points and two rebounds, is second on the team in batting with a .365 average.

"Softball is a lot of individual players, but you still have to be a team. They still need to learn how to do that."

Kris Risley, softball coach

Assistant coach Sandy Barnett-Daulton described Croddy as a quiet player who does a good job for the team at the plate, and leads them with her bat rather than her voice. Croddy, sophomore Tracy Bryan, who is third in batting at .323, and junior Jill Freeman, who has only committed two errors this season, are the core that Barnett and Risley say will help the rest of the team develop. "They've led us early on," said Risley. "From the beginning they've been near the top of the batting averages."

LeAnn Mosler swings and misses a pitch in the Lady Metros' game against Southern Illinois-Edwardsville. Mosler has filled in at catcher for the Lady Metros, where she has batted .302 with 10 RBIs in 22 games.

Junior Annemarie Bechini and freshman Kasie Childress have stepped up as the team's top two pitchers.

Bechini has posted a 3.02 ERA while going 2-5 in 11 appearances with 17 strikeouts.

Childress leads the team in strikeouts with 22 while posting a 5-5 record with a 3.09 ERA.

The team was having problems early in the year filling positions because of the players who left after last season, so some players were asked to step up to fill the holes.

The lack of a catcher last fall forced the team to insert LeAnn Mosler into the position even though she is a pitcher with little experience as a catcher. "She's done a good job there for not having played the position," Risley commented.

Risley said some of his players who play on the volleyball team may leave in the near future to play volleyball full time. He said if the team is able to fill those players positions through recruiting, the loss of the two sport players should not affect the team's development.

Risley said he sees the rest of this season as a learning year to put experience under his players' belts. He believes that with good recruiting to allow the experienced players play their native positions, the team will be competitive next year.

"We need a couple more position players and just people who can fill in and we'll be real strong next year," Risley said.

Student government elections embarrassing

■ Candidates have been involved in fights, both verbal and physical, mudslinging, threats and name-calling.

Verbal assaults. Threatened lawsuits. Near fights. Broken promises. Alleged cheating. Character assassinations. Dirty politics. No, it's not the latest debate between Bob Dole and Patrick Buchanan. It's IUPUI's version of a presidential election.

For the third straight year the election for Undergraduate Student Assembly president has been marred by less-than-exemplary tactics by the candidates.

Two years ago a presidential candidate used funds from student activity fees to purchase an advertisement in The Sagamore. Last year one of the candidates alleged the counting of votes was rigged and threatened to sue the university.

This year it's much worse. All of the candidates and tickets except Tom Vessely, CLASS presidential candidate, have been involved in election mishaps. Craig Cooper, presidential candidate on the Student's Choice ticket, and Tom Mulcahy, vice president on the Team Diversity ticket, were almost involved in a fight last Wednesday. Bruce Beal, president on the Politically Incorrect ticket, broke up the fight.

Cooper's campaign stickers were found on Team Diversity posters earlier in the week, prompting the confrontation. Beal then posted a negative campaign poster about Cooper. The Election Committee removed the poster to Beal's chagrin. He said he followed every rule in hanging the poster and that his First Amendment rights were violated.

Prior to the elections even taking place, Cooper complained to the proper authorities that the touch-tone voting system was biased against him.

To top it all off, the candidates for president signed a poster stating they would run positive campaigns this year. So much for that idea.

The bottom line is the student elections have become a mockery of themselves.

They are an embarrassment to the university, the candidates, the Office of Student Activities, the Student Affairs office, the Election Committee, the students, student government ... we could go on and on.

All the candidates involved should apologize in writing to students, administrators and the people who volunteered their time to put on the elections.

Furthermore, the Election Committee and the Office of Student Activities need to actually learn from past mistakes and stop allowing student elections to spin wildly out of control.

Maybe the students should be allowed to vote for the individuals running the elections, along with the students taking part in them.

We at The Sagamore thought this year's elections would be different. It seems we overestimated the civility of USA candidates.

Bisexual love is just that — love

■ People who have a relationship with someone of the same sex really aren't going against the standards society has placed on the definition of love and commitment.

It's bisexuality only found in people who are confused about whether they are gay or heterosexual? Or, is it to be commended as a way of life that is open to see people for who they really are inside, regardless of their gender?

It's no secret that there's been a significant increase in the number of people who will openly claim to be bisexual.

In fact, we can't ignore the issue because it's everywhere. It's making people question their morals, traditions and beliefs.

I think that everyone who is faced with this dividing issue must test the priorities they set for their relationships.

In assuming that most people would place love on the top of their list, how can these same people say that bisexuality is wrong?

Not all bisexuals are confused and promiscuous, and I know a lot of heterosexuals who are so.

What if someone found the most deep, honest and heavenly love of their entire life in someone of the same sex? Many people don't believe it's possible to feel romantic love for someone of the same sex.

But for those people who believe they do, who are we to judge their feelings?

As time has progressed, we have learned that love does not discriminate against an individual's skin color, religion or race.

Maybe it's time for us to learn that it also doesn't discriminate against gender.

After all, gender is a physical characteristic just like skin color and the shape of our bodies.

I think people are afraid to admit they could fall in love with someone of the same sex.

Mainstream society has given us the profile for the person we are supposed to fall in love with, and going against mainstream society would be indisputably difficult.

Not to mention the reactions you may receive from family and friends.

I think most people would rather be involved with someone who is "acceptable" to their family, friends and work place because it's much easier.

Therefore, if someone falls in love with someone of the same sex, and together they risk taking some ridicule from others, I believe they should be commended for their devotion to each other and their individual courage.

After all, we can't help who we love, we just do.

Letters from readers

■ Professor should stay out of parents' business when it comes to their kids in class.

The "Classy Kids" headline in Letters from the Readers Section in the March 25 issue of The Sagamore, once again, caught my attention — as it caught the attention of Cheryl Watson Turner in the February 26 issue.

I took as much exception to her letter as she did to the original article and because I felt she was taking aim at me and mine, I decided to take time from my busy schedule to pen a reply.

Oh, I could see Professor Watson Turner's point if she were saying that she didn't want a rowdy 2-year-old in her classroom. But the idea of taking someone's kids away because they were left in a hall while the parent attended classes?

The first time someone comes and picks up my kids out of the public halls of IUPUI while I am in class, there is going to be hell to pay!

My kids have just as much right to be in those halls as anyone else.

As far as Watson Turner's implication that everyone on campus would have children here, I have to say that with the exception of last week (it being spring break for most of Marion County's elementary schools and all), even in spite of the fact that many of the professors occasionally look the other way, I see very few children on campus; yet I know for a fact that many of the students have kids.

So, on that basis, I would have to say that the students here at IUPUI are very good at finding care for their children, especially in light of the fact that many high schools now have better on-campus child care facilities than we do.

Watson Turner also said IUPUI students were not responsible.

Not one of the students on this campus, that I know of, has to be here.

Many, if not most, hold down full-time jobs, take care of families and attend classes on at least a semi-regular basis.

If that's not what Watson Turner calls responsible, I'd like to know what is! Has this woman never had kids or does she have a mother or mother-in-law of gold who never refuses to keep her kids?

Personally, I doubt she has ever had any. Sometimes the only alternative a parent has to bringing the kids to school is to either leave them at home alone or skip class themselves.

How responsible would a parent be to leave their kids alone?

On the other hand, I can imagine what would happen to a person's grade in Watson Turner's class if they missed a class "just because" the sister was sick and refused to take the children in, or grandma (who usually watches the kids) fell and was unable to care for them or school was closed for a holiday IUPUI doesn't recognize and one-day child care was impossible to find.

Putting all of these points to the side for a minute, I would like to say that I like bringing my children to school with me and would do so occasionally, even if I could find alternative, occasional care.

I must say here that I am lucky they are old enough (8, 10, and 12) and well behaved enough (I am not the only one to think so) to sit in the halls together without causing a major disturbance (they always bring things to keep busy) and I would never take more than one of them at a time into class with me.

This being the case, I like for my kids to be on campus; I think it's important for them to see where I spend so much of my time and what I do all day.

Sad as it may be, IUPUI is one of, if not the most culturally diverse place in Indianapolis and I want my children to experience that.

I think it is important for them to be aware of all the different kinds of people in the world and to see the different ways different people express themselves so one day they may grow up to accept all kinds of people and feel free to express themselves the best way they can.

If Watson Turner would deprive my kids of that, then I am glad she is not in charge. I also think she should give the students at IUPUI the credit for the responsibility they undertake.

I know it is often very great.

And until we hear from the majority of students who are paying for these classes say they are being disturbed by the presence of these kids in their school, I think Professor Watson Turner should take care of her classroom and let everyone else take care of theirs.

Let's not forget who pays whose salary around here and who pays for the facilities while we're at it!

One of the many underlying reasons I decided to come to college at IUPUI after so many years away from school was so my children would be encouraged to come (to college).

I want them to know that I am really doing it, that it's not always easy and I am working to get through it.

I am proud of the fact that I have come back to school. I want to share the experience with and show my pride to my kids.

I can't imagine anyone would want to take this away from us.

■ Is it accurate to say all white people are ignorant when it comes to racial issues?

This letter is concerning The Sagamore's Focus article of March 25, 1996.

No one should deny racism exists, and let me be clear in saying it is an appalling thing. But, despite what your article reads, it is not confined to Caucasians.

Do you suppose sometimes the reason some students don't approach Ellington after being referred to him is simply because, like a lot of people, these students don't have time to waste and simply do not want to get the run around?

I am unclear as to what bearing Ellington and Hewlett's statement of having "taken classes in which they are the only African American students" have as far as a gauge to the amount of racism in the IUPUI community.

I am also unclear that, if there is an imbalance in the proportion of African Americans in the Indianapolis community compared to the proportion of African American students at IUPUI, how the Caucasian population, as a whole, is therefore racist?

I was floored to read the section where Mr. Ellington admits to seeing "how the effects of racism could be cumulative and could create reverse racism," which I think means in a roundabout way, he admits to being racist at times.

I am sure that attitude does not reflect at all in his demeanor and personality, and thus has no effect on his approachability as a monitor to Caucasian students.

Ms. Hewlett's comment about "... it takes me a while to trust a white person" smacked so much of prejudice, I had to read it twice to be sure of what I read.

I applaud MaDesa Kinchlow's attitude. She refuses to cry "I am a victim" and has taken what is a terrible, horrid quality in many people and has used it to make herself stronger.

Why isn't Todd Schmidt a proponent of ALL people to take a "heritage course," instead of just "Caucasians"? Is it really accurate to say that all "white people are ignorant when it comes to racial issues"?

IUPUI dance troupe celebrates 13th year with 'A Baker's Dozen'

■ Anniversary performance at Madame Walker Theatre will feature modern, ethnic dance.

By Minka Hopper
The Sagamore

The IUPUI Moving Company is movin' on up. It will be celebrating their 13th anniversary April 23 at 8 p.m. at The Madame Walker Theatre with a benefit performance of "A Baker's Dozen."

The IUPUI Moving Company is a modern dance workshop that also explores ballet, jazz and ethnic dance.

Although IUPUI does not offer a dance major, participation in the group is required for those minoring in dance.

Most members are current students, but past members who have graduated periodically return. The Moving Company currently has 15 members, including two graduates.

"A Baker's Dozen" will be performed in honor of the Dayspring Center, a shelter for homeless families. The center provides 300 hot meals six days a week for hungry families.

"Contributions made from the performance will help us room, feed and counsel families who are looking to get their lives back in line," said Lynne Prather, administrative assistant for the Dayspring Center.

"Therefore, I hope that the concert will be a great success for both Dayspring and the Moving Company."

The performance on April 23 will not be the Moving Company's first concert for Dayspring.

"We have dedicated the past couple of shows to the Dayspring Center to collect food or to funds to help them out," said Mary Matland Kimball, the troupe's artistic director. "We try to put a big focus on linking with the community."

Courtesy IUPUI Moving Company

The IUPUI Moving Company's performance of "A Baker's Dozen" will include "Straight From the Heart," a piece choreographed by former student Laura Davis. Davis was the first IUPUI student to graduate with a minor in dance.

The Moving Company has put on three performances so far this year.

In October, it performed a showcase in Fort Wayne; in December, it performed an informal studio concert and in March, the group was featured in Michigan. But the dance troupe's 13th anniversary performance, which the group has been rehearsing for since August, will be their biggest performance yet.

The anniversary performance of "A Baker's Dozen" will feature all 15 members of the Moving Company performing modern, ballet, ballroom and Chinese ethnic dances.

Many of the featured dances were choreographed by the group's members.

The program has three sections: "Dance: A visible expression of love and culture," "Dance: A connection of body, mind and spirit" and "Dance: An adventure in time."

Kimball has high expectations for the concert.

"I hope the concert will be great and reach the community," she said. "It definitely has the capability. My dancers have been rehearsing almost every day. They have a love of dance and a great willingness to become proficient professional dancers."

Four-year member and Moving Company president, Lora Maher, agrees.

"Our group has a strong nucleus and over the past years our dancers have become stronger," she said. "I hope that with this concert we (will) reach and entertain the audience."

"I hope they get something out of it and have something to take with them when it's over," she continued. "I hope they see that we enjoy and love what we have been doing."

"I hope that with this concert we (will) reach and entertain the audience. I hope they ... have something to take with them when it's over."

'The Truth About Cats & Dogs' Uma Thurman, Janeane Garofalo

So what exactly is "The Truth About Cats & Dogs"?

Well, the truth is that it's only an updated telling of "Cyrano de Bergerac," or for those versed only in movie adaptations, Steve Martin's "Roxanne."

But hey, it's pretty entertaining for a tired movie formula.

Thurman is the dim-witted beauty who pretends to be Dr. Abby Barnes in order to help her best friend "meet" the man of her dreams. Garofalo — the wise-ass friend in "Reality Bites" — plays the wise-ass doctor here, and she's just great. Without her, "Cats And Dogs" would be something less than nothing.

Galactic Cowboys seem content to be outlaws.

Their style doesn't conform to current industry expectations, they actually know more than three chords and they don't profess to be from Seattle when they're really from somewhere else.

The band's The Beatles-meets-Faith-No-More-meets-Metallica formula creates a 14-track trip through some of rock's best moments of the past.

Soaring harmonies, relentless guitar rhythms, quirky lyrics and catchy choruses are prevalent throughout the disc.

Following Union Station's lead, another city landmark fading away

■ The City Market has lost nearly $500,000 over the past three years; rent too high says one tenant.

By Brian Mohr
The Sagamore

The Indianapolis City Market has lost an estimated $500,000 since 1993 and market store owners can account for some of the loss.

"The market needs a whole new concept," said Jason Smith, owner of the City Market Deli. "We've gotten so many new places to compete with that weren't around five years ago. And there's not enough shops. You bring one in and you lose one." "Maybe that has to do with rent being so high," he added.

Attempts have been made by the city to stifle the market's financial failures, but to no avail.

After it lost approximately $93,000 in 1993, Mayor Stephen Goldsmith persuaded the municipal corporation overseeing the market to contract Kosene & Kosene, a private organization, to run the operation.

But under private management, the market lost nearly $254,000 in 1994 and $152,000 in 1995. The market board pays a $12,500 annual management fee to Kosene & Kosene.

Jim Reilly, general manager of the market, said the age of the building has a lot to do with the money lost.

"We've had a lot of repairs like electrical and plumbing that had to be made. This is a very old building and it costs a lot to maintain," said Reilly, who was brought in by Kosene & Kosene in 1994. He estimated annual utility bills to be about $200,000.

Reilly also said that prior management did not have a very aggressive leasing program for bringing quality tenants into the market. And when Kosene & Kosene took over, there were a few "marginal" tenants who couldn't be signed to a new lease because they were barely making it.

"We made the city aware of the fact that they would experience some (economic) loss before it would see any economic gains," Reilly said.

Currently, there are 30 stores in the market filling 70 percent of the leasable space.

Reilly and store owners also point to the Pacers' decision not to relocate its souvenir shop in the market as another road block to the market's revitalization.

"I think the (shop's) relocation to the market would have been a more logical move," Reilly said. "The traffic we would've all received on game days would've given the stores a lot of business. I guess it just wasn't right for them."

Reilly noted that aside from the traffic the other stores would've received, the deal would have meant $55,000 a year in rent for the market.

Donnie Walsh, Pacers' president, said the decision not to relocate was simply a sound business decision.

"We were looking for a reasonable rent price and they were asking too much," Walsh said. "We would've had to have had (a better price) than we had (at Market Square Arena), and it wasn't."

The market has added four new stores in the last year: DiPalo Florist, City Market Seafood, Reggie's Deli and the Bath Seed Company.

"I'm pleased but impatient with the development," Reilly said.

The City Market, like Union Station, is losing money to competition which has sprung up around town in recent years. Since 1993, the market has lost an estimated $500,000.
