Over the past decade, tuition has increased 40.7 percent according to the Consumer Price Index. Over that same period tuition at IUPUI has gone up nearly 97 percent. Here is how IUPUI tuition stacks up with other state institutions over the last 10 years.

School	1987 Cost	1997 Cost	% Increase
IUPUI	$1,793	$3,541	97.6%
Ball State	$1,850	$2,909	57.2%
Purdue University	$1,915	$3,302	72.4%
Ball State University	$1,767	$3,414	93.2%
Indiana State University	$1,785	$3,186	81.5%
Wayne State College	$1,517	$1,957	29.0%

Latest tuition increase exceeds inflation rate

Cost of IUPUI education second most expensive in state.

By Kelly Hoffman
Assistant News Editor

Full-time, undergraduate tuition at IUPUI is among the most expensive of Indiana's public institutions of higher learning — second only to IU Bloomington. And tuition increases continue to outpace the rate of inflation.

Up 4.3 percent from last year, IUPUI's tuition not only exceeds last year's 2.8 percent inflation rate, but misses the goal of the Indiana General Assembly's budget appropriations for 1997.

"When universities request funds, they include anticipated tuition increases in their reports," said Robert Ruble, associate commissioner of financial affairs for the Indiana Commission for Higher Education. "The state determines the funding level for each university by looking at the overall request and subtracting the anticipated income from student fees. Although the appropriations made by the General Assembly assumed fee rates would be three percent for undergraduates, there is no legal obligation for the campuses to follow (the recommendation)."

ICHE, a governing board for the state's university system, uses the nation's inflation rate to set fee recommendations and gauge the affordability of attending college. According to commission figures, inflation has increased 40.7 percent over the last ten years. Over the same period, undergraduate tuition/fees at IUPUI have shown a 96.6 percent increase.

While the disparity may seem striking, several university officials contend that judgment based on inflation alone ignores the complexity of the issue.

"It is inappropriate to judge tuition by inflation," said John Walda, president of the IU Board of Trustees. "The higher education price index, which measures growth and expenses specifically incurred by the higher education industry, is distinct from the consumer price index. Costs simply go up quicker for us than for consumers. Furthermore, the (inflation) argument ignores what's going on in public funding."

University administrators have criticized the state legislature in the past for its continuous decrease in funding and contend that inflation is only one of many factors contributing to the cost of higher education. Many maintain that, while competitive faculty salaries, improved libraries and well-equipped labs may cost more, they also make an education at IUPUI a valuable investment.

Students seem to agree an IUPUI education is a good deal. While many say they could not make it without financial aid, the benefits of advanced technology and professional faculty outweigh the inconveniences of tuition increases.

"I don't mind paying more," said Tabitha Harris, a sophomore in the School of Education. "You get what you pay for, and (IUPUI) is better than most places in terms of the quality of education compared to the amount of tuition."

Tuition increases do not seem to be detrimental to enrollment rates either. The Office of Admissions and Office of the Registrar report an increase in both enrollment and credit hours taken for the past two years.

"In the past few years, we have looked at what role tuition plays in maintaining or increasing enrollment," said Alan Crist, director of both the Office of Admissions and the Office of Scholarship and Financial Aid. "Based on research, as tuition has gone up, it has had a relatively small impact on the level of enrollment. Tuition hasn't gone up enough to become a determining factor."

The rate of tuition hikes has been decreasing over the past few years. In fact, the ICHE reports this year's average increase as the lowest by Indiana post-secondary institutions in nearly 20 years.

Diversity conference geared toward cultural education

Workshop to offer safe environment for students to examine racial stereotypes and increase their own social awareness.

By Kim Morgan
Staff Writer

IUPUI will play host to the 1997 Multicultural Student Leaders Institute conference, Sept. 26 through 28 at University College.

The theme is "Action Through Leaders: Advancing Non-traditional Approaches."

Sponsors for the conference, include the Office of Multicultural Student Affairs and the Office of International Student Affairs at University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. The event is open to all students, and the invitation has been extended to other local campuses. Registration for the weekend is $20 for students.

"It promises to be a rewarding experience," said Robert Bedford, director of Multicultural Student Affairs and conference coordinator.

The conference is designed to bring together potential and current students from Midwest campuses to share their leadership expertise and experience.

All the workshops, created to steer participants toward problem-solving and diversity, will provide an opportunity for discussions of more accepting cultural behavior.

Dr. J. Herman Blake, vice chancellor for undergraduate education, will be the keynote speaker at the well-coming banquet Sept. 26.

Pamela King, director of Adaptive Education Services, will speak at a luncheon Sept. 27; and later that day, Dr. Regina Turner, from Blake's office, will moderate a discussion titled "Student Leaders in Action."

Bedford outlined other objectives for the conference, which include:

- increasing participants cultural and social awareness and sensitivity;
- inspiring individuals to understand the benefits of working together toward an appreciation;
- providing a safe atmosphere and environment where participants can examine their fears, stereotypes, mis-education and misgivings about race and culture;
- allowing students to explore their own racial, cultural and socioeconomic assumptions; and

■ instilling sensitivity and motivating students toward a personal commitment to change.

Jeremy Mendelson, conference co-coordinator, said, "Goals for the weekend include highly interactive workshop sessions and networking with students both from IUPUI and other schools joining the conference."

Bedford anticipates around 100 students will participate in the conference, with at least 40 from Illinois.

"One aspect of the conference that is special to me is the participation of at least twenty Upward Bound students," he said. "The college students will be role models for these high school students during the weekend. I feel this is a chance for great leadership training."

The Great Cheerleader

Executive Vice Chancellor William Plater analyzes IUPUI's success; co-workers reflect on the man behind the mustache.

By J.M. Brown
News Editor

Despite being ultimately responsible for maintaining a high standard in academics while presiding over a slue of faculty, Executive Vice Chancellor William Plater manages to keep focused on one two things day in and day out — the future, and IUPUI's identity therein.

As chief academic officer, dean of the faculties and an English professor, Plater has deep-seeded ideas about learning, teaching, administering and the power of literature.

"There is no better preparation for living in the future than studying literature because it gives you a mirror reflecting life, and you can look at it in ways that you can't while you're living it," Plater said.

After earning his baccalaureate, master's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Illinois at Champaign, Plater wrote "The Grim Phoenix: Reconstructing Thomas Pynchon" — an analysis of literature in society — while serving as associate director at his alma mater's School of Humanities from 1977 to 1983.

His first position with IUPUI was as dean of the School of Liberal Arts in 1983; and in 1987, he assumed his current position. He is married to Gail Maxwell and has two children.

Although his position undoubtedly requires constant discretion, privacy and conservatism, Plater's long-time administrative assistant, Nan Bohan, offered a brief peek into her employer — as a person, not solely a title-bearer.

"He likes to wear Jerry Garcia ties, and he's a gourmet cook who brings in apple pies to the office," Bohan said. "His personal life is characterized by consideration and his professional life is reflected through his personality. He is very sensitive, intense, thorough and has the good of the university in the forefront of everything he does."

Chancellor Gerald Bekop echoed Bohan's description of Plater.

"Bill is a wonderful and congenial colleague who has a fine sense of humor — which is important in higher education," Bekop said. "His leadership — speaking and writing about the work of the faculty, the changes taking place in higher education and (his vision) of academic work in the future — has resulted in our increasing national recognition."

Chatting in his book-packed office, Plater shared some of that vision and formula for success.

■ Programs, research vital
Plater said revamping and renaming the Undergraduate Education Center is just the tip of the achievement iceberg.

"Some people may think that, with the formation of University College, our work is done," Plater said. "But in fact, it is just beginning. What we have to do now is take this opportunity and really make it the kind of program that is going to enable undergraduates to succeed."

Plater also notes IUPUI's rise among the ranks of major metropolitan universities — through academics and research.

"In a global sense, we can all be

As a professional archaeologist and new assistant professor to the anthropology department, Dr. Jeff Bendremer has spent the last three years studying the Mohegan tribe.

By GRAHAM S. CLARK
PRODUCTION ASSISTANT

As part of Archaeology Week in Indiana, IUPUI's modern-day Indiana Jones, Jeff Bendremer, displayed some of his findings from his field research with the Mohegan tribe in Connecticut. As the new assistant professor of archaeology, Bendremer has been a professional archaeologist since 1979 and has studied many Native American tribes. Coming to IUPUI from Eastern Connecticut State University, Bendremer has spent the last three years as the tribal archaeologist for the Mohegan tribe.

Bendremer's latest study of the Mohegans has been with the aid of students from his classes. "We have been running an archaeological field school," said Bendremer. "This is a college course where there are no tests, no papers and no homework. The course just consists of doing archaeology."

Robin McCorkle, treasurer of IUPUI's Anthropology Club and one of the students who assisted Bendremer with the field research, feels that "archaeology is so important to where we are going."

"These artifacts on exhibit represent my childhood," said McCorkle. "After it rained, we would find arrowheads, and so I consider this part of my life."

For anthropologists, finding artifacts as hard evidence makes the books more realistic, said Bendremer, which is one of the reasons Bendremer chose to come to IUPUI.

"Here I find that students are just starved for archaeological artifacts, and there is real enthusiasm with the students I work with," said Bendremer.

Jessica Murer, lab director for the anthropology department, said that Bendremer represents a positive image for the field of archaeology.

"It's good to have someone like Jeff here to guide students toward their archaeological career," said Murer. "It's also good that students can be able to have access to him to get the information that they need in order to be better archaeologists."

Another aspect he appreciates is the diversity on campus regarding student knowledge and involvement.

"Many of the students are older than traditional students," said Bendremer. "There is a lot of experience involved in the classroom making the course more enjoyable."

When Bendremer began his research with the Mohegans, he considered his job to be as the "archaeological and historical consultant to the tribe."

"This was an amazing opportunity to do research on one of the oldest tribes in the country, which was founded in 1663," he continued.

The Mohegans received their federal recognition as a tribe about a month before they took him in as the tribal archaeologist.

"There is a great deal of history and archeology that represents the transitions they went through from basically a free self-governing entity, to periods of oppression," he said. "Now they are recognized federally as a tribe."

During Bendremer's studies, he was able to work in unison with the tribe.

"Throughout history, archaeologists and Native Americans have traditionally been at odds with one another," he said. "The tribes would view the archaeologist as grave robbers."

"Now a days we have changed the way we work, so that most archaeologists are pretty sensitive to Native American perspectives. But there are still very few archaeologists who work directly with tribes."

"The important thing to note is that these artifacts belong to the Mohegans and will be returned to them once we have finished our analysis," Bendremer said.

Though current times may be positive for the Mohegans, there was a time when they were oppressed.

"There is actually nobody who speaks the Mohegan language at this point in time," said Bendremer. "It is because during the 19th century, Mohegans caught speaking their language would be beaten by whites from the surrounding community. So any expression of Mohegan culture was really not tolerated by the community, and eventually as a form of self preservation the language was just not taught."

Bendremer believes there is definitely more that can be done with tribe, but is glad to show off a little bit of Mohegan history through the anthropology club.

Bendremer hopes to give more students hands-on experience.

"I am hoping that we can get a large group from here to go out to Connecticut and to do another year of excavation on the reservation, but I know that students have responsibilities so this might be a stretch," he noted.

Mistaken identity

By J.M. BROWN

When Howard Brackett's famous former drama student announces to the world in a Best Actor Oscar acceptance speech that his old teacher is gay, Brackett's life is turned inside out.

Frank Oz's new film "In & Out" — staged in fictitious, small-town Greenleaf, Ind. — takes a humorous look at self-realization and the pros and cons of coming out of the closet.

Kevin Kline, of "A Fish Called Wanda" and "French Kiss," continues his career of masterfully playing quirky, yet lovable, characters.

As Brackett, the English teacher who doubles as the drama club coach, Kline's comedic timing is perfect as he really captures the essence of denial and other defense mechanisms.

On a more serious note, the film did portray the real-life headaches and heartaches Brackett — and others in similar positions — suffers while under suspicion by family, friends and co-workers that he is gay.

One criticism, which by the end is mostly forgivable because it adds so much fun to the film, is the constant reverting to the same old stereotypes used to describe gay men since the dawn of time.

Several of Brackett's acquaintances offer his "excessive" personal cleanliness, love of poetry and knowledge of "arty" things as fairly conclusive proof that he must be gay. But, then again, that is probably how most people from Indiana would identify a gay man.

All in all, "In & Out" is great for a few cheap laughs, and with top-notch supporting players — Joan Cusack, Matt Dillon, Tom Selleck and Debbie Reynolds — the film is destined to perform well at the box office.

As music becomes more internationally obtainable, Japan's Pizzicato Five is here to give modern pop a swift kick in the right direction.

Their first release on Madar Records — which contains all new material — "Happy End of the World" is a blend of futuristic DJ abstractions and retro vocal stylings. The incorporation of both aspects gives the whole experience a modern approach.

Formed in 1984 by DJ Konishi Yasuharu, Pizzicato Five became well-known for recycling four decades of music ranging from early '60s rock to disco and Top-40 music.

When the United States discovered the band, Yasuharu and vocalist Noniya Maki were already Japanese superstars, having numerous overseas releases under their belts.

Now with a trademark sound and new direction, "The World's Spinning at 45 R.P.M." begins the album's journey as Yasuharu brings forth an electronic homage to a psychedelic Rolling Stones-esque era. "The Earth Goes Around" travels forward as Yasuharu discovers drum and bass, also known as jungle techno, a new concept for them.

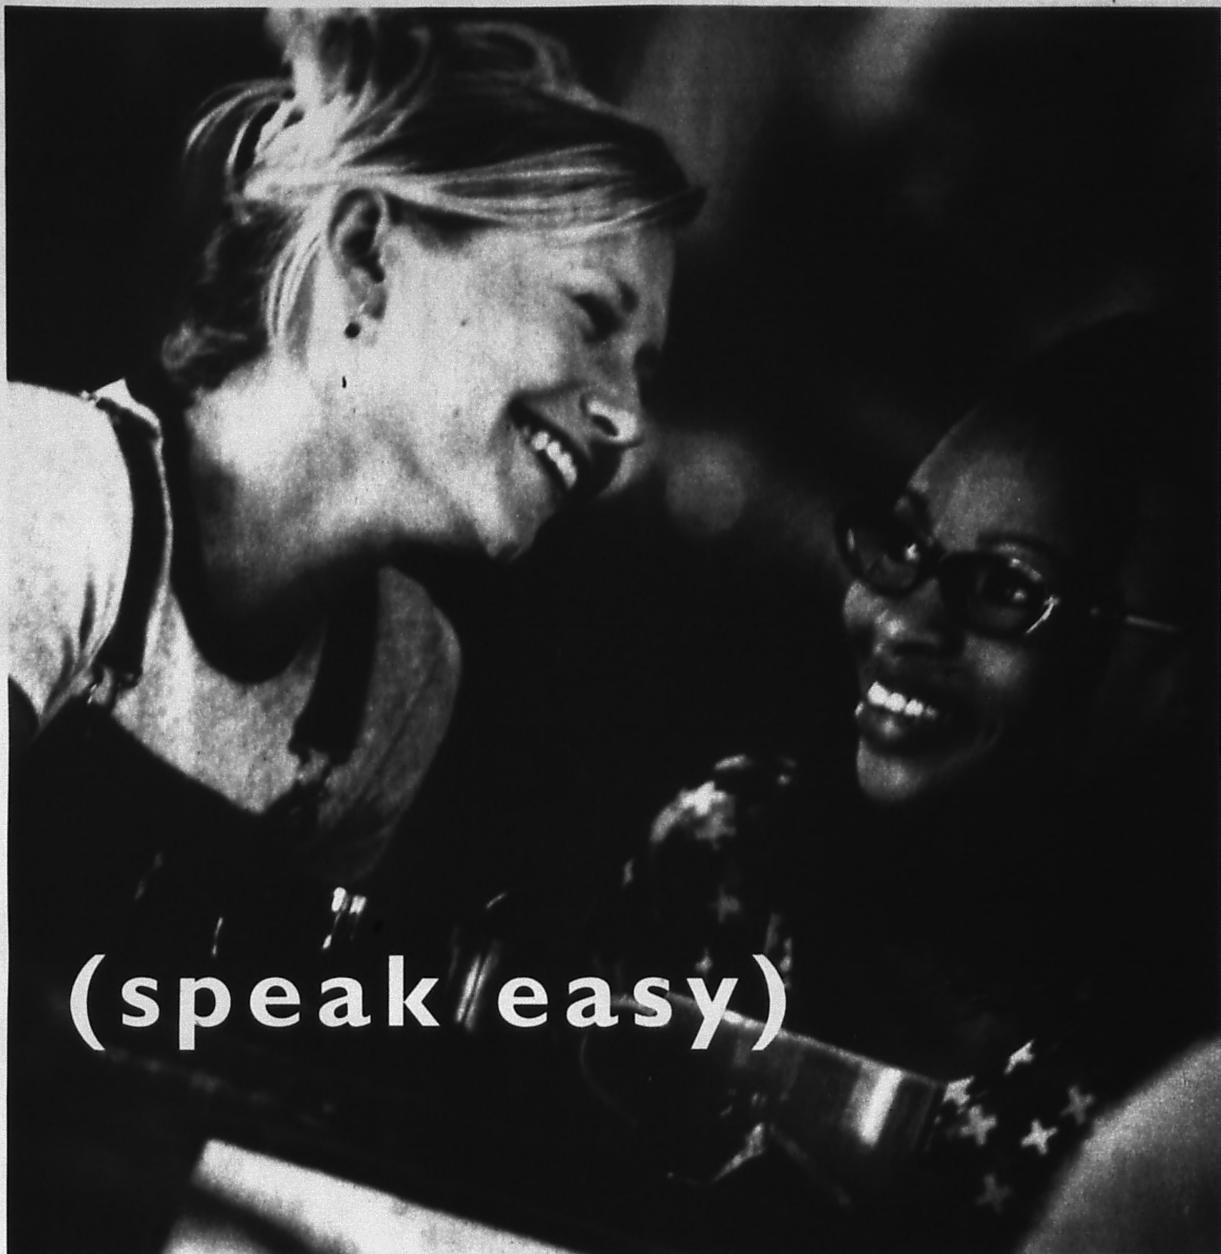

Like a foreign version of television's "Nick at Night," "Trailer Music" lets listeners know Yasuharu's obsession with television theme music.

In between the exceptional DJ talents, Maki's vocals create a sexy entourage, respectively sounding like a Japanese version of '60s French vocalist Astrud Gilberto.

And even though all the lyrics are written and sung in Japanese the inlay card does have a translation into English for the Japanese impaired.

Farewell to a hero

■ Noted vice chancellor's departure generates a need to pass on IUPUI legacy of student dedication.

GUEST EDITORIAL BY JENNIFER KAY RUMPLE
UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT ASSEMBLY SECRETARY

Think of Chicken Little running around like a chicken with his head cut off (pardon the pun), screaming obscenities about the fate of the sky. Now, imagine this thought racing through my head over and over as Dr. J. Herman Blake, vice chancellor for undergraduate education, announced his resignation from IUPUI.

Shock, sadness and uncertainty filled my heart as the Undergraduate Student Assembly's executive committee attentively listened to his decision. All the while I'm thinking, "What are we going to do without this man?"

Everything the university is doing for its students — enriching the undergraduate educational experience through unity and diversity — is a reflection of his vision.

I began thinking of Dr. Blake's legacy in Anna Melodia, assistant vice chancellor for undergraduate student affairs, and everyone else who understands and wants to help implement his vision.

Anyone who has come into contact with this man, even for a brief moment, could attest to feeling his strength, power, generosity and dedication to helping the students in any way possible.

Although IUPUI is losing a great administrator, the educational and organizational opportunities at this university are just beginning. I challenge every student to recognize what each office and school is implementing to further their own personal educational experience.

Retention rates are very low at the university level in many states. IUPUI is no exception. This is a problem — it has been addressed and solutions are in force right now to alleviate this travesty.

Enter University College — the physical space and programs of which are more in tune with students' needs.

Harriett Bennett, assistant director of University College and assistant to the dean, told me the key word is "accountability." IUPUI wants to be accountable for students' successes or failures, whatever the case may be. Hopefully, not the latter, but doesn't that say something about the university's dedication to students?

On a personal level, Dr. Blake will sorely be missed. And those who have not had the pleasure of meeting him should do so before he's gone.

He is taking with him the pride of "breathing life" into such programs as University College. His decision was a tough one, but he will "follow" his wife, Dr. Emily Moore, to Iowa State University.

From my perspective, he is not "following" her — he is "walking" beside his wife, holding her hand strong and supporting her goals. This is a very admirable and courageous decision. Once again, he is breaking new ground. Following what is right for him and his life. How often does anyone hear of a man moving to support his wife and put her career goals first? Not often enough.

In a world short of heroes, I, as well as many others say thank you to Dr. Blake — thank you for being our hero.

Crossing ethnic boundaries

■ The ability to respect another human's cultural background may be the difference in inter-racial relationships.

I am not sure how to be more politically correct or to the point, so if I offend anyone, I am sorry. So here goes. I am white. I act white, I dress white, I talk white, and I look white. I am white. I'm not really white though, I am actually Apache-Scottish-American, but I have yet to find a spot on any form I have ever filled out to put that, so I just check white. It works for now.

Normally me being white wouldn't be much to write about, let alone for a column which will be read by 26,000 people, so I try to make this more interesting.

My girlfriend is African American. How's that for interesting? Okay, so it may not be interesting or newsworthy at all, but I promise you this: when my family found out, it was news to them.

I grew up in southern Indiana in a town where there are no African Americans. To my knowledge there never have been any either. Heck, I don't even remember ever seeing an African American face to face until I was nine or 10 years old and living in Indianapolis. So for me to bring home a woman who was anything but white was a surprise.

I don't want anyone to get me wrong and think that my family is prejudiced. They all like her, but my grandparents don't believe in inter-racial relationships. That's it, nothing more. They have never said anything to me about it. I just know how they feel. It's how they were raised and how I think they thought I was raised. A year later, they are fine with the whole thing.

Dating an African-American woman is definitely different than dating a white woman. People are still people, but there are differences. Take for instance perms. I thought perms were to make your hair curly. Nope. They are for straightening your hair. Who would have guessed it?

I like the fact that I am dating an African-American woman. She is the most beautiful woman I have ever known. She is also my best friend.

When we first started dating, I think it was hard for her to date me. She made a decision many years ago that she would never date a white guy. Then I came along. It is the most flattering thing in the world to know that she is willing to be with me, even through the glares of onlookers. Sometimes when we are in the mall, we get these looks. You know, the ones from African-American males wondering what such a beautiful African-American woman is doing with a white guy, and from white people wondering what I am doing with her.

At first it was nerve-racking, but you get used to it after a while.

I understand the look, actually. I remember giving it. When I was in high school, I remember having a crush on this girl who was dating an African-American male.

I remember thinking to myself that all of the rest of the white guys must be really bad for her to date an African-American male. I know, it's completely absurd and wrong, but it is the way a 15-year-old mind works. Unfortunately, it's also how a lot of 55-year-old minds work, too.

Some people have asked me if it's a case of "Jungle Fever" or something, but I always tell them I feel fine. I am not with her because she's African American, but because she is the person who is. I love my girlfriend with everything I have. I hope one day she will marry me. I think she would make a wonderful wife, a great mother and will always be my best friend.

Sure we have a lot of differences, but we are learning to work around and through them. I have learned to appreciate her heritage and beautifully rich African culture and she has learned to appreciate my predominantly European culture.

We both want to go to Scotland and Ghana to see where our families originated. Our history is important to us and so is our future. It is a lot of work, but well worth it, not only for us, but for the rest of the world.

I know that if her strong African upbringing and my southern upbringing can allow us to be together, then anything is possible. Maybe one day we can all just get along and see each other as people. I am not saying to forget your culture, or that of your neighbor, but I am saying to embrace it, enjoy it and share it in.

The bottom line is this: it doesn't matter what color you are, or where you are from, as long as we can respect each other. Without respect, you can't have a relationship of any sorts. As human beings, we are all in a relationship with each other. It's just a matter of what kind and to what degree.

Soccer team rolls to fourth straight win

■ Metros defeat St. Francis 7-0 at Kuntz Stadium, team off to it's best start since inaugural season in 1987.

The weather was clear and a slight breeze blew across the soccer field at Kuntz Stadium, as the IUPUI soccer team rolled St. Francis College 7-0.

The Metros got off to a quick start when Thies Herrmann scored their first goal 7:06 into the first quarter. With that goal the tone was set for the rest of the game. The Metros were in St. Francis' half of the field for a majority of the game.

The Metros out shot St. Francis 28-6, making an easier night for goalkeeper Derrisa Newkirk.

The Metros' offense spread the wealth around. Six players recorded goals. Herrmann, Phil Knipscheer, Paul Fabry, Jeremy Ross, and Todd Scheely each scored a goal. Thua G. Barley scored two goals for the Metros.

The stingy IUPUI defense came up with another shutout. The Metros have 360 minutes of shutout soccer in their last seven games. The last team to score on them was Virginia Wesleyan, which is the only team to defeat them this year. They have outscored their opponents 24-4.

"Much of our success is due to a more balanced team," said head coach Steve Franklin. "Last year we relied on our defense to get us out of jams."

Knipscheer, the team captain, agrees with his coach. "We have a much deeper team than last year," said Knipscheer. "The offense has been the key spark for us."

The Metros have also got an added boost from the play of Barley. He has become a scoring threat because of his aggressive play and the fact that he is getting open more this year. Barley has already tied his career high of six goals for a season, which he set last year.

"I am not satisfied with just scoring one goal in games any more," said Barley. "I have been putting into action what coach has been teaching me the past three years," he added. "We have been able to free up (Barley) to play his style of soccer," said Knipscheer.

Barley attributes most of his current scoring to a better frontline and better passing. Franklin and Knipscheer agreed that the only thing the team needs to work on is dictating the tempo of the game after gaining the lead.

"We haven't been able to take advantage of controlling the tempo when we lead," said Franklin.

"We've improved on coming out strong, but we need to start playing at our pace, not the other team's," said Knipscheer.

Knipscheer credits the team's chemistry for their success on the field.

"We all get along really well," said Knipscheer. "We spent two days together getting to know one another's personality." The Metros have shown that they know how to win. Their record stands at 5-1 so far this season. Its best start for IUPUI soccer since its inaugural season in 1987. That year the Metros opened with seven straight wins.

In the latest National Soccer Coaches Association of America/Umbrco College poll the Metros are ranked eighth in the central region. It's the first time the Metros have been ranked while under the eye of Franklin.

The Metros will be at home Sept. 26 when they take on Cumberland College at 7 p.m.

Metros cut down Foresters

■ IUPUI returns home, plays to 3-1 win over Huntington College.

BY KENTON R. BILL
STAFF WRITER

After a long road trip the IUPUI women's volleyball team returned home to cut down the Huntington College Foresters 3-1 (15-7, 8-15, 15-5, 15-10) on Sept. 17.

"We decided to step up our game and take the match," said Amy Schwilke.

The Metros were dominating Huntington as they breezed through the first game 15-5.

Kami Holt led the Metros with a team high 37 kills. Another leader was Cory Peppercorn.

"Cory's middle attack in the fourth game was the difference," said Lynn Swadlow.

The team had just returned from an extended road swing that started with a weekend tournament at Gannon University in Erie, Pa. The Metros won the first match over West Virginia Wesleyan, but dropped their next two matches to Gannon University and Slippery Rock University.

"We played the first match really well, but physically died in the last two," said Amy Schwilke. After the trip to Pa. the Metros won back home again in Indiana and traveled south to Knoxville.

The Metros were soundly defeated by the NCAA Division I Purple Aces 3-0 (6-15, 6-15, 11-15).

"We have played five matches in six days, we need some rest to heal and regroup," said head coach Steve Pappas.

The Metros return home on Wednesday, Sept. 24 to take on the University of Indianapolis at 7 p.m. in the IUPUI Gymnasium.

Metros beat cross-town rival U of I

■ Women's tennis team down after doubles matches, then comes from behind in singles to defeat the University of Indianapolis 6-3. Record now even at 3-3 as season nears midpoint.

BY KENTON R. BILL
STAFF WRITER

After being down 2-1 following the doubles matches, the IUPUI women's tennis team sprang to life and rallied in the singles competition to trounce cross-town rival University of Indianapolis 6-3.

"We were asleep during the doubles matches but all of a sudden when we started the single matches we woke up," said head coach Debbie Peirick.

The Metros were dominated in the doubles competition as the No. 3 team of sophomore Heather Sykes and freshman Jill Horn were the only duo to win (8-3).

Not only were Sykes and Horn impressive as a tandem in doubles, but they also dominated their Greyhound opponents in singles action.

Sykes won in straight sets over the U of I's Sarah Holland 7-6 (7-5 tie-breaker) and 6-3.

Horn was the first Metros player off the court. She trounced her U of I counterpart Mary Jensen 6-1, 6-0.

"I have been playing well so far. I feel like I have improved a lot since the beginning of the season," Horn said.

Other winners for the Metros were junior Amber Rensburg 6-4, 3-6, 6-4, and freshman Marise Van Rensburg 6-4, 2-6, 6-4.

Freshman Sarah Van Gessel dropped her first set, but came back in the second and third sets to pull out a 2-6, 7-5, 6-3.

"I believe we, as a team, have a lot of potential, and with the right attitude we'll be able to still do very well," said Van Rensburg, a South African native who is playing in her first year in the United States.

The Metros are now even at 3-3 on the season. The next home match for the team is Oct. 1 when they take on another inner-city rival Marian College at 4 p.m.

YOU'RE LOOKING AT TWO COMPLETELY OPPOSITE, FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT WAYS TO INVEST IN STOCKS. WE RECOMMEND BOTH.

Whether you want a fund that selects specific stocks, or one that covers the market, we're on the same page. Our CREF Growth and CREF Equity Index Accounts use two distinct strategies for investing in the stock market, but both aim to provide what every smart investor looks for: long-term growth that outpaces inflation.

The CREF Growth Account searches for individual companies that we believe are poised for superior growth. In contrast, the Equity Index Account looks for more diversification, with a portfolio that seeks to mirror the experience of the U.S. stock market as a whole.

Like our CREF Stock Account, the largest single managed equity fund in America and our Global Equities Account, which actively seeks opportunities worldwide, our accounts are managed by experienced investment professionals. They're the same experts who have helped make TIAA-CREF the largest pension system in the world, with $190 billion in assets under management.
