Paula Parker-Sawyers (above) is special assistant to the chancellor for diversity and the director of the Office of Neighborhood Resources. She was the first female deputy mayor of Indianapolis when she was appointed to the position in 1988. She is a 1987 IU School of Leadership graduate and is co-chair of the campaign committee to elect Secretary of State Sue Anne Gilroy mayor of Indianapolis in 2000.

"We may choose to live in a total all-whatsoever neighborhood, go to an all-whatsoever church and only socialize with people who look like us. In that way, many of us are living hypocritical lives when we talk diversity nine to five but don't live a diverse life."

Dorothea Parker wasn't about to have her 13-year-old daughter ride the 18 North Meridian city bus route an hour and a half each day to Shortridge High School. Not when the 15 Riverside route was closer to both their home and another public high school.

It may very well have been the height of racial segregation in mid-60's Indianapolis. And her daughter, like herself, may very well have been black. But that didn't stop the woman, who had grown up in Lockefield Gardens and married an Indiana Avenue jazz musician, from convincing then school board president Richard Lugar to allow young Paula and 10 classmates to be the first black students to integrate the all-white Northwest High School.

The determination, hopes and dreams of her parents and grandparents inspired Paula Parker-Sawyers to create a strong record of public leadership.

Parker-Sawyers, special assistant to the chancellor for diversity and director of the Office of Neighborhood Resources, was the first female deputy mayor of Indianapolis when she was appointed by then Mayor William Hudnut in 1989. She was better received in that appointment and in her eight years on the city-county council than she was in 1968, when she was chosen by peers to be the first African-American governor of Girls State — a high school conference sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary.

"To us today, 30 years later, that doesn't seem like a big deal. It was a huge deal — it made headlines," Parker-Sawyers said of the milestone. "We received prank calls at home."

"How could that blankety-blank be elected governor of Girls State?" she remembered one harsh caller to say. "Rockets were thrown at my parents'

Delores Johnson, born in 1929, survived the Great Depression. That wasn't all. At the age of five, her father abandoned her mother and six siblings. Eventually, all the children became wards of the court.

Most of the men in her life, at one time or another, sexually or physically abused her. Her foster parents pulled her out of the ninth grade when she was 13 years old to work and provide money for the family.

She was a poor, young, black woman growing up in a racist world and was raised to believe a man had to take care of her.

"I didn't know any different," said Johnson. "I didn't know anything about being independent. That didn't cross my mind."

But, three marriages, six children and a lot of hardships later, her mind has changed.

Johnson will turn 70 years old in a couple months and is earning her baccalaureate degree in general studies at IUPUI.

"The only thing in my mind, my whole life, I always wanted an education," Johnson said. "But, I could never think of a way I could get back into school."

Throughout her life, Johnson knew plenty of educated women, but said none were willing to teach her for fear they would lose their jobs. After all, she was black in a racially segregated world.

Still hungry to learn, Johnson would read books and study on her own. "I would go to the library and learn everything that I could learn," she said.

The Bicycle Action Project is not a traditional store. In fact, the retail aspect is just a small part of the operation. And the people who restore used bicycles and prepare them for sale are children.

The program, in its 11 year, offers young people, ages eight to 16, hands-on experience in repairing used bicycles, and is rewarding in several ways.

"One of the things that we wrote on our website is that — and I think this is a really particularly poignant commentary — is that our goal at Bicycle Action Project isn't necessarily to build better bicycles, but it's to build better kids," said Dax Gonzalez, program director.

"And I think we do that by instilling a sense of accomplishment, a sense of overcoming obstacles, making learning a fun experience," he added.

It's a 20-hour commitment: Students come for ten weeks, one day a week for two hours a day.

The main motivational factor for these industrious kids is the Earn-A-Bike program. "When a kid, a young person, comes into our program and says, 'Hey, I wanna get into the program,' they're really talking about the Earn-A-Bike program," said Gonzalez.

The basement of the shop is where many of the soon-to-be-fixed bikes are housed. Students choose one bike to repair for retail sale, and, after two weeks, choose one for themselves. The kids work on

Golden Key National Honor Society deadline approaches

Golden Key National Honor Society is a student-run organization with membership worldwide. IUPUI is in the chartering process for establishing a Golden Key chapter on campus. Membership is open to juniors and seniors with a cumulative 3.5 GPA. The membership deadline is April 15. The chartering induction ceremony will be in the Madame Walker Urban Life Center at 1 p.m. May 2. For more information, contact Jeff Vessey, dean of students and Golden Key chapter adviser, at 274-4431.

IU medical students to make 'house calls' this spring

The phrase "house calls" has gained new meaning for IU School of Medicine students. On April 17, approximately 150 medical students will descend upon the Haughville and Blackhawk neighborhoods for the fourth annual Spring House Calls project in which student volunteers provide yard and home exterior maintenance work to homes in near Westside neighborhoods.

Students will meet at 9 a.m. at the Christamore House, 502 N. Tremont St., to receive team assignments. Each team will then proceed to their assigned home to begin work projects which will have been pre-determined by homeowners. Twenty homes are scheduled to receive maintenance and landscaping work. Neighborhood leaders chose homeowners to participate based on need.

Caller using emergency phone helps foil crime

BY BETH SHREEVE
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Last year, an anonymous source placed an emergency phone call to campus police dispatch reporting a suspicious person committing a possible theft near the Dental School.

The caller described the person's vehicle, and an officer was sent to investigate. When the officer arrived on the scene, he found a vehicle matching the given description. Minutes later, dispatch received another call from an officer across campus. The officer was receiving a description of the material stolen from an individual's car.

The officer who found the vehicle match realized the stolen material was in the front seat. The thief was found and arrested.

When any of the campus' emergency phones is picked up, the dispatch receives a call immediately, and the location is instantly displayed.

At orientation, we talk about safety and we tell them not only about the emergency phones, but also the escort services," said Samer Omesh, orientation representative.

Campus police also provide an escort to students when walking to their cars. Students may pick up any emergency phone on campus and an officer will arrive at that exact location. Users hit the button or pick up the receiver and the phone call automatically is transferred to dispatch.

"By far the phones are used for people who get locked out of their cars, flat tires and dead batteries," said Lt. Bob True, IUPUI officer.

Orientation representatives said many parents come to orientation with safety concerns — even though the crime rate on campus isn't considered by police to be high.

Police departments statistics reflect within the last five years, 25 violent crimes have been committed on campus — one murder, four forcible sex offenses, 13 robberies and two assaults.

PARKER-SAWYERS

home. "As a black girl going to Girls State," she continued, "I could only room with a black girl. That was it — blacks roomed with blacks."

A social responsibility

It was 1968. Martin Luther King Jr. was dead. Robert F. Kennedy was dead. And Parker-Sawyers was off to Ball State University and later to George Washington University in the nation's capitol. The move to D.C. was her first big step toward a career dedicated to public service.

She worked in the offices of US Congressmen Hudnut and Elwood Hills.

"How can you come out of the 60s and not want to do something," said Parker-Sawyers, a 1997 graduate of the IU School of Law-Indianapolis. "I can't imagine growing up in that period not having some sense of responsibility — particularly in a year when two phenomenal leaders were killed for no other reason than what they believed."

After her city-council stint ended in 1983, she was appointed by then Indiana Governor Robert D. Orr to the Marion County Judicial Nominating Committee and the Public Service Commission of the Consumer Council.

Those positions were followed by service on Indianapolis' Board of Public Safety, the Coalition of Human Services Planning, the platform committee for the Indiana State Republican Convention, the city's Poor Relief Tax Force Committee, as well as the Campaign for Healthy Babies.

Becides having been a fixture in city politics and community organizations for 20 years, Parker-Sawyers gained first-hand knowledge of how to run IUPUI's Office of Neighborhood Resources from the original neighborhood resource — her grandmother. Parker-Sawyers said her grandmother not only raised 13 children of her own but helped to rear more than a hundred children in the neighborhood.

"She worked harder in her life than I probably ever will in my life," Parker-Sawyers said.

Some parents in the area paid the patriarch for watching their children; some didn't.

"She did what she thought was right," Parker-Sawyers continued. "If children needed caring so parents could work, then that's what she did.

"When my children started coming along, I was on the city-county council," she added. "So, what? I had an infant. I took my daughter to city-county meetings. It was, I gotta go. Don't have a babysitter. Gotta go."

Diversity not hypocrisy

Parker-Sawyers has beaten the odds that an African-American woman born into a childhood of racial prejudice and gender discrimination would be a successful and high-profile as she has been and continues to be — especially in a conservative Midwest town.

What she and many others have yet to beat, however, is the pattern of hypocritical lifestyles she believes many people still live — talking a good line about diversity at work but abandoning the notion after the day is done.

"When we think of diversity, we think about in our workplace," Parker-Sawyers said. "Then we leave our workplaces, the confines in which we are supposed to act properly, and get in our cars and may turn on a radio station or listen to something in our car that, in our workplace, would be offensive."

"We may choose to live in a total all-weather neighborhood," she continued, "go to an all-weather church and only socialize with people who look like us. In that way, many of us are living hypocritical lives when we talk diversity nine to five but don't live a diverse life."

Her answer to the problem: All people should expose themselves to a healthy variety of activities that aren't part of the expected routine for someone of their ethnicity, gender or age group. This suggested plan of action is workable, she thinks, but won't likely bear fruit to the most desired extent anytime soon.

Changing the human nature that dictates the flocking together of birds of a feather, will be a long, arduous task, she believes.

"That's not something that will change overnight," Parker-Sawyers said. "It will take generations to change. That's one thing that I would want to say and will be saying to the chancellor."

"While we can make major inroads into the issue of diversity and the practice of diversity on campus, to expect a magic potion, a magic formula, is just not going to happen," she continued. "It will take years."

New and ahead

Parker-Sawyers' most current political affiliation is as co-chair of the campaign committee to elect Secretary of State Sue Anne Gilroy mayor of Indianapolis in 2000. Just as Parker-Sawyers was the city's first female deputy mayor, Gilroy, if elected, will be the city's first female mayor.

Just because the city may be on the brink of bringing a woman's touch to its political crest, however, does not necessarily mean the gender battle has been won, Parker-Sawyers believes.

"The fact that we're still saying 'first,' says there's a ways to go," she said. "The fact that we are just now getting to the first real potential female mayor is symbolic of the fact that we still have a long way to go."

Gilroy's gender distinction, and her own for that matter, however, really should not be an issue at all, Parker-Sawyers said.

"It ought to be not a matter of the first female mayor, but that we have the best candidate nominated, and oh by the way, she happens to be female," she said. "That goes right back to that diversity issue."

"It's a matter of at what point do we stop seeing a person's gender and color and start seeing their qualifications," she continued. "And we're not there yet."

Maybe by the time the world, or at least Indianapolis, gets there, Parker-Sawyers will be a political candidate again. She said she will not consider running for elected office again until all three of her children have reached young adulthood. Her eldest child attended IUPUI, and her two younger children are still in secondary schools.

"To take that time away to be a candidate in today's world requires a couple of things," she said. "One, 25 hours in every day. It also requires a willingness to answer sometimes very difficult questions."

Her dream for the future, she confessed, actually would not be an elected office but rather an appointed one. She fancies being an ambassador to a small, developing country — her first choice being a locale in Africa.

Her unit also has a darkroom, in which agents can perform forensic photographic examination and development.

"You can testify with scientific evidence," Varounis said, while showing slides of FBI crime scenes. "No two items are alike."

Some of the many items displayed facial comparisons, clothing and body scars. Varounis lectured in reference to their similarities.

"There's a difference between recognition and identification," Varounis said, while describing the benefits of digital imaging in determining a suspect's true identity.

According to Varounis, facial comparisons are not as easy.

"Digital imaging helps in separating the questioned versus the known," she said.

Varounis also expressed the importance of clothing in FBI investigations.

"It may be the same manufacturer, but no two items are alike," she said while showing a photo of a masked bank robber whose jeans were used as evidence.

According to Varounis, photogrammetrists are also important in a FBI investigation.

"With this procedure we can determine size and height of a suspect," she said.

Digital imaging provides specialized lighting, including ultra violet lighting, to enhance details of photographic evidence.

Varounis began learning photography at the age of nine from her uncle, the head of the Time/Life photography lab in New York City. In July 1980, she graduated from the FBI Academy.

She began investigating organized crime matters and was transferred to the Washington D.C. Field Office in 1982.

Her career began to develop and she was assigned to kidnappings, fugitive investigations and drug-related crimes.

During her 19 years with the FBI, she has been responsible for more than 300 arrests.

She also has participated in two terrorism investigations and was a member of the SWAT team in Atlantic Prison riot in 1987.

While married to an army serviceman — who would later commit adultery with her children's babysitter — a friend continually spoke of Indianapolis and the African American culture dominating Indiana Avenue.

"I just loved the concept of the oneness of black people. I loved it," Johnson exclaimed. "I knew this was the place to go."

So, she divorced her husband and moved to Indy.

When asked what finally gave her the courage to become independent, Johnson simply said, "experience."

One of her first occupations in the city was a domestic — taking care of the home and children of the prominent Eiteljorg family.

"I was first because my foods were too spicy," Johnson said, with a laugh. "They were not used to that taste. I thought that was so funny."

It's funny to her now because the Eiteljorg Museum prominently displays Southwestern culture and tastes.

Johnson also drove taxi cabs for a living. It was 1959, and here she met her late, third husband of 33 years. The one man, she said, that treated her "decent."

Years later, her husband passed, her children grew up and Johnson was ready to retire from the floral business she had been running for the last 17 years.

"The timing couldn't have been more perfect," said Johnson.

She joined a senior citizen's group picked to receive free education in order to provide daycare for young children throughout the city.

She got her first taste, in more than 50 years, of what felt like to be back in a classroom. She earned nine credits at Ivy State College with the daycare program and said to herself, "what am I gonna do now?"

"That's when I came to IUPUI," said Johnson. She was 63 years old.

Johnson said taking courses with her senior citizen's group helped her with the transition to a younger student population.

"It wasn't tough at all," said Johnson. "They accepted me as their peer. I closed my eyes to the ages."

Since that time, each year Johnson registers for nine credits in the fall and spring semesters and two each summer session.

"I want to be an incentive right now," Johnson said. "I want to continue being an incentive for the young people who approach me and say 'you are my incentive. Every time I see you, it makes me that more determined I want to stay in school.'"

This grandmother of 18 said, "It doesn't make any difference when your schooling stopped. You can always go back and get your education."

Johnson intends to graduate and use her degree to work and give back to the community.

She is also a great-grandmother of 21. She does not drive. Johnson takes the bus to campus every day. She is a survivor. From the struggles of her childhood to present day, she has overcome many hardships that would destroy the spirit of most.

Last summer, doctors diagnosed her with throat cancer. She went through 13 weeks of radiation therapy and still maintained her classwork.

She said her biggest obstacle is not her age, nor her illness, but her instructions.

"If they don't take her seriously as a student, but they call her ma'am."

"I realize they have respect for me," said Johnson. "If it wasn't for the instructors saying 'yes ma'am,' I wouldn't feel older at all."

Many students may see Johnson hanging out in the basement canteen in Cavanaugh Hall, working on crossword puzzles, studying and discussing life with other students.

"Young people come to me and they want to get into discussions about their studies and they want to philosophize," Johnson said. "This is what I truly love."

Johnson hopes to lecture in the golden years of her life about the importance of education.

"All my life, I needed a feeling of completion," Johnson said. "I always felt something was lacking. Now, I feel complete."

Studying ancient and Eastern philosophy, as well as The Bible she parallels her life with many of these beliefs.

"Socrates said he felt like truth was the greatest thing — truth and education. But, virtue was happiness," she said. "To be happy, you had to be virtuous."

She strives to be a virtuous person, she added.

"It's not that I want to be liked," she said. "I want to be educated because I feel like when I go to my home beyond this life, I must be the best person I can be. I owe this to God."

"You have to lift yourself up. It is not what is happening outside of you. It's not the external pressures," Johnson said. "You must put internal pressures on yourself, to move yourself up."

STAFF REPORT

IUPUI 6, 4, 8, 10 • Southern Utah 2, 2, 2, 7
The Jaguar softball team continued their winning ways with a four-game sweep over Mid-Con foe Southern Utah University April 2 and 3.

Freshman pitcher Megan Fultz won the opening game of the series, allowing only two runs in seven innings. Junior Adamson drove in two runs for the Jaguars in the 5-2 win.

A four run third inning gave the Jaguars a 6-3 win in the second game of the series. Adamson and freshman Lydia Carroquillo both collected two hits for IUPUI while sophomore Crystal Lambert drove in two runs. Freshman Amanda Martin picked up the win, allowing only one run while striking out seven.

The Jaguars won the third game of the weekend behind another solid performance on the mound from Fultz. Fultz picked up her ninth victory of the season in the 5-3 win. Junior Tonya Darr, freshman Julie Wooten and Adamson all tallied two hits apiece for the Jaguars. Wooten and Darr also drove in two runs.

IUPUI 2, 1, 4, 10 • Youngstown 10, 8, 12, 14

The Jaguars opened up their Mid-Con season at Youngstown State University April 3 and 4. Seven errors for the Jaguars in the first game of the weekend allowed Youngstown State to cruise to a 10-2 win. Although he allowed only five earned runs, junior Jake Tharp collected his fourth loss of the season.

In the second game of the series, IUPUI was limited to five hits as they dropped their second conference game in a row. Senior Toby Rogers led the Jaguars in the 8-1 loss with one hit, one run and a stolen base.

The Jaguars were held to four hits in the third game of the weekend. Youngstown State scored five runs in the sixth inning and cruised to a 12-5 win. Freshman Josh Cooper and Rogers both had a hit and scored a run for IUPUI.

The Jaguars erupted for 16 runs and 12 hits in the final game of the series as they ended their four-game losing streak with a 16-14 win. Sophomore Josh Brumbaugh led the Jaguars in the slugfest with two home runs and six RBIs. Cooper also collected three hits and scored two runs while freshman Mike Mitchell tallied two hits, two RBIs and three runs scored. Junior pitcher Andy Dudley won the first game of his career by striking out four people in the last two innings.

Jaguars to host Mid-Con event

By MATTHEW DAVIS
SPORTS EDITOR

For the first time ever, IUPUI will host a Mid-Continent Conference Championship event. The women's tennis championship will be at the Indianapolis Tennis Center and the IUPUI campus April 17.

"It's an honor to be able to host a conference event like this," said Linda Carroll, assistant director of athletics. "This gives us an opportunity to show the Mid-Con what our venue is like."

The women's tennis championship, which features the top four teams in the conference, will begin at 9 a.m. with finals following at 3 p.m.

The Jaguars, who have two conference matches remaining, are currently in fifth place in the Mid-Con with a 2-3 record.

Oral Roberts University won the conference tournament last season and leads the Mid-Con again this year.

A free youth tennis clinic, sponsored by Wilson Racquet Sports, will also accompany the women's championship this year at the ITC.

"The athletics department has had a wonderful relationship with the ITC," said Carroll.

"The Mid-Con has asked us to host this event next year, but we're waiting to see how smoothly things run this year."

IUPUI also will host the Mid-Con men's and women's soccer tournaments the next three years.

Indianapolis to celebrate week of poetry

STAFF REPORT

A new annual event, Young People's Poetry Week, April 12 through 18, has been created this year to highlight the value of poetry for children and younger adults. The week is part of National Poetry Month, which is in its fourth year. The following are local events celebrating the week-long event.

Poetry Open Mic

Anyone is welcome to share original poetry or just sit back and listen to others beginning at 7:30 April 14. The Poetry Open Mic night is held the second Wednesday of every month at Border's Books & Music, 8675 River Crossing Blvd. The event is sponsored by the Indiana Poets Association.

Youth writing workshops

The Etheridge Knight Festival of the Arts will host workshops from 10 a.m. to noon April 17.

At The Children's Museum, pre-school and elementary students can enjoy storytelling and jewelry making. High school and college students can attend "The Chisel that Shapes the Stone," a workshop facilitated by Peter Martin, instructor of English at IUPUI.

The workshop will highlight the technical aspects of language, different perspectives and the use of imagination.

Pre-registration is required, and all participants must enter through the Hedrick Education Center, on the north side of the building.

The Indianapolis Neighborhood Resource Center will host elementary and middle school creative writing workshops. Topics will include: writing with emotions and imagination, first impressions, writing with a deadline and discovering the poet in you. All workshops are free, and parents are encouraged to attend. Pre-registration is required. The center is located at 1802 N. Illinois.

For pre-registration and information, call the Etheridge Knight hotline at 925-0465.

Youth poetry contest winners to perform their works

A Po-Rap-Try Concert will begin at 2 p.m. April 17 at the Children's Museum. The concert will provide a venue for young artists to showcase their talents in music, dance, rap, hip hop and poetry.

The 5th Annual Etheridge Knight youth poetry contest winners will be featured artists. Also scheduled to appear are Jerome Taylor and Voices of Unity and The CyphaDons. Master of ceremonies, Terrance Asante Doyle, is a nationally-known storyteller and performing artist.

Admission is free. Those attending must enter through the Hedrick Education Center.

Group breaks ground for new Herron facility

Photos by Kim Morgan/The IUPUI Sagamore

Local acts prove to be anything but mellow

BY KIM MORGAN
LIFESTYLES EDITOR

Diamonds & Rust is an acoustic folk and rock duo who performs regularly around Indy. The pair were recently joined on stage by Michael Kelsey at BW-3's downtown location for what proved to be an impressive evening of music.

Diamonds & Rust, a soon-to-be-married couple, are Joe Hart and Kris Luckett. Both are singers, songwriters and guitarists.

One would have to look far and wide to find a greater vocalist than Luckett. She can transform herself into almost any popular voice of our time. She eloquently performed songs by Sheryl Crow, The Indigo Girls, Ani DiFranco, Christine McVie, Fiona Apple and Tori Amos. She even passed one of the ultimate tests of vocal skills (with flying colors) when singing Chrissie Hynde's "Back on the Chain Gang." Yes, even Luckett still gets a kick out of Hart's accompanying "ooh" and "ah."

The duo have performed together for the past eight years. They weave original music into their set, but Hart pointed out that many crowds want to hear something familiar to their ears. The couple is just happy to be performing together.

The following are upcoming show dates: (tentatively) April 15 at BW-3, 15 E. Maryland; April 16 at Ft. Wayne (Ind.) Museum of Art, April 17 at Scotty's Brewhouse in Muncie (Ind.); (tentatively) April 26 at Herb N' Things, 10570 E. 96th St.; and from 8:30 to 11:30 p.m. April 29 at BW-3, 15 E. Maryland.

The crowd got a double dose of listening pleasure when Diamonds & Rust welcomed Kelsey, who just happened to be in Indy that night, to join them during their evening's performance. Both Luckett and Hart have been long-time admirers of the guitarist extraordinaire.

Kelsey gained notoriety behind the scenes, in his Lafayette (Ind.) studio, Kelsey's Playground. He has also performed in a variety of cover bands from rock to country.

Kelsey said he switched from electric to acoustic guitar to take advantage of the broad variety of sounds, moods and nuances available from the instrument that could increase the dimensions of his music.

As a solo act, he's put on an incredible show, combining original songs with "Kelsified" covers and vocal tracks with instrumentals. He describes his style as "progressive aggressive acoustic guitar." He doesn't just play his guitar, but slaps it and tunes it as he strokes the strings mid-song and incorporates just about anything he can get his hands on that will make a sound. He performs a one-man show that one would have to see to believe. It is obvious that he enjoys creating music and pushing himself to new heights with his art.

During his set, he paid homage to his mother — the woman who taught him his first three chords — and put his personal touch on Peter Gabriel's "In Your Eyes" and John Lennon's "Come Together."

Catch him while he's still on the local circuit. He will perform at 8 p.m. April 17 at Jitter Beans, 1912 Broad Ripple Avenue, and at 9 p.m. May 5 at The Willard in Franklin.

Kelsey has two CDs available through his web site at www.michaelkelsey.com.

■ Greek dinner supports IUPUI scholarship program

Enjoy a Greek meal and support an IUPUI scholarship program at the same time at the Greek Islands Restaurant April 18.

The sixth annual event, sponsored by the Department of Restaurant, Hotel, Institutional and Tourism Management, will raise funds for the endowed Elias and Foto Stergiopoulos Scholarship Fund. The fund provides one or more scholarships to qualified RHIT students.

The $30 meal will include Greek salad, gyros, Santorini potatoes, pistachio, baklava, tea, coffee and drink.

The Greek Islands Restaurant is located at 906 S. Meridian St. Seating will be available between 2 to 5 p.m. Reservations, which are required, may be made by calling Pat May at 274-2599.

■ IUPUI dance troupe plans spring concert

A wide range of dance styles will be featured in the IUPUI Moving Company's "Dance Millennium" 16th annual spring concert.

The concert is free and will begin at 2 p.m. April 18 at the Madame Walker Theatre. Open seating will be available beginning at 1:30 p.m.

Modern, jazz, tap, ballet and Irish step will be performed to choreography created by students and professionals, said Mary Maitland Kimball, the Moving Company's artistic director.

The Madame Walker Theatre is located at 617 Indiana Ave. For more information, contact Kimball at 274-0611 or via e-mail at mkimball@iupui.edu.

■ Volunteers needed for Indy Jazz Fest

Volunteers are needed for the biggest arts and music event the city has ever hosted. The Indy Jazz Fest is a major tourist destination music festival focusing on the rich jazz heritage of Indianapolis. It will take place at six downtown venues, including IUPUI and Military Park, on eight stages from June 17 to 20.

Indy Jazz Fest will present an unprecedented line-up of critically acclaimed musicians from the worlds of jazz, funk, blues and soul. There will be more than 60 different performances during the four days of the festival, with more than half by nationally and internationally known performers.

Volunteers are needed for a variety of tasks. Anyone interested in learning more about being a volunteer or in signing up should visit www.indyjazzfest.org.

■ Butler theatre department to present "Agamemnon"

The Butler University Theatre Department will present the classical work "Agamemnon" for the conclusion of its 1998-99 season. The play will open April 14 in Lilly Hall Studio Theatre 160 on the Butler campus.

"Agamemnon" tells the ancient story of the Trojan War through the lives of Helen, the fabled beauty; the Trojan prince, Paris; his sister, the doomed prophetess Cassandra, the Greek king, Agamemnon; and his wronged and vengeful wife Clytemnestra. Their high crimes and misdemeanors have become legend.

This production marks the directing debut of John Green, the new chair of theatre at Butler. Born and educated in England, Green has more than 60 stage productions to his credit, having staged works in England, Scotland, France, Germany, Slovenia and the US.

Performances will be at 8 p.m., April 14 through 17. Matinee performances will be at 2 p.m., April 17 and 18. Tickets are available for $5 by calling 940-9247 or at the Lilly Hall Box Office Room 130 before the performances.

Group rates are available.

BIKES

both bikes over the 10-week period.

- "Once they've completed those 10 weeks, basically, they'll have a bicycle that's gone from some various state of disrepair to actually being rideable," said Gonzalez.
- After they complete the program, the children have the option of moving on to the advanced course.
- They must take an exit exam to ensure they understand the skills they've already learned, after which they receive their own bikes and helmets.
- "The advanced program has a couple of different components," said Gonzalez.
- Participants can choose to work in the retail shop or can become junior instructors.
- "Basically, right now, I'm the lead instructor here for the Earn-A-Bike program," Gonzalez said. "We also have a number of volunteers that come and help us out."
- "And we also utilize our past graduates as junior instructors that will assist me from time to time in working with the kids — especially if I have large groups," he continued.

Gonzalez believes the practical knowledge the young participants get from the program is invaluable. Graduates who assist by working in the retail shop and repairing bicycles for customers are exposed to a real-life work environment.

Through this work, graduates learn about responsibility and professionalism, Gonzalez believes.

Customers can bring bicycles to the shop for repairs.

While Gonzalez doesn't see the project as competitive with new bike shops, there are some obvious advantages to using this resource.

"We don't do painting here, because we don't have the correct facilities," said Gonzalez. "I think that our repair rates for bicycles is gonna be pretty favorable."

"And really, the important thing too is that if you have older bikes, especially bikes more than 15, 20, 25 years old, it becomes increasingly difficult to find parts for those bikes to repair them and to find people who've spent a lot of time with those bikes," he continued.

The kids at Bicycle Action Project are familiar with older bikes, and the store is home to hundreds of parts. "So, we kind of fill a niche, I think," said Gonzalez.

Program leaders, who recruit children through community events, will be at the Children's Museum Expo in May and have visited Black Expo and the Presence of Mind Resource Show.

"We go out and actually do presentations to schools, and also just word of mouth is how we get kids," said Gonzalez.

The program doesn't have a stringent admission policy.

"Basically ... if someone hears of the program, and they just call us up, ask for information, we'll send them an application," explained Gonzalez.

The program employs three full-time employees and five student employees. Volunteers are always welcome. Gonzalez said that volunteers don't need to have experience with bicycles, but they must enjoy working with young people.

Gonzalez said the time commitment for volunteers is flexible and can be as little as two hours each week.

The shop receives funding and bicycle donations from 25 to 30 sources, including individuals.

The Lilly Endowment is the largest contributor to this program; and the program welcomes further donations.

The Bicycle Action Project, located at 22 E. 22nd Street, accepts donations during business hours: noon to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

Shadrich Johnson, sixth grader, and Jovan Baker, senior participating in home schooling, work on a bike's brakes.

Art Center features nature-related series

STAFF REPORT

The Indianapolis Art Center will present two exhibitions with the idea of landscape as their theme. "Land and Sky" is on display through June 6 in the Churchman-Fehsenfeld Gallery.

"A Toll on Earth" is on display through May 2 in the Hurt Gallery.

"Land and Sky" features the work of Sukey Bryan and Carole Bolter. Bryan, based in Stanford, California, is a painter who depicts violent natural phenomena such as geysers, volcanic eruptions and tidal waves.

"I'm interested in the energy behind the elements of nature," said Bryan. "The phases of existence and the various ways the promise of life is fulfilled are both my source and my vehicle for expression."

Bolter will have six paintings on display.

Bolter, from Lowell, Indiana, is not only an artist but an amateur pilot. Her pastel paintings show the landscape of the air — clouds as seen from airplanes, both from above and below, and of the emotions that such landscapes evoke.

"In my paintings, the natural world is a place where time is a cloud moving in stillness, where the forces of nature work quietly without haste or aggression," Bolter said. "It is not our everyday experience of people, places and things, it is of a different sort that perhaps says more about the artist than about topography."

In addition to the paintings, an installation by Flagstaff, Arizona artist Shawn Skabelund will complete the landscape theme.

"A Toll on Earth" fills an entire gallery at the Art Center and depicts the role of the Midwest, especially Skabelund's former home of Detroit in the fertilizer processing industry.

"My site-specific installations all demonstrate my desire to create art that gives viewers time and space to think about the local community, economics and ecosystems they inhabit," said Skabelund.

The Art Center is open Monday through Friday 9 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., Saturday 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday noon to 3 p.m.

Organist with IU ties to play at local church

STAFF REPORT

Clyde Holloway, former professor of music at IU-Bloomington, will give an organ recital at Christ Church Episcopal Cathedral on Monument Circle at 7:30 p.m. April 13.

Part of the annual Artist Recital Series, the event is co-sponsored by the Indianapolis Chapter of the American Guild of Organists and the church.

Holloway received his bachelor and Master's degrees at the University of Oklahoma. He received his doctorate at Union Theological Seminary, study during which he was full-time organist at St. Bartholomew's Church in New York City.
