Indians announce new affiliation with Milwaukee

Indianapolis ball club agrees to a one-year deal with Brewers for 2000 season.

By Ed Holdaway
Sports Editor

The Indianapolis Indians announced that they will serve as the Triple-A affiliate of the Milwaukee Brewers for the 2000 season. "The meetings that Indians' General Manager and I have had with the Brewers' President, Brewers General Manager and the Brewers player development staff have been extremely positive," said Indians President Max Schumacher. The announcement came as no surprise following the Cincinnati Reds decision to move from Indianapolis to Louisville nearly a month ago.

"We enter into our new agreement with the Milwaukee Brewers with a great deal of excitement for the future of the Indianapolis Indians baseball," Schumacher said. For the Indians, this will be the first partnership with the Brewers, and the ninth different franchise the Indians have been affiliated with in their 60 year history.

Schumacher

Both Schumacher and Brewers' General Manager Dean Taylor expressed excitement in the new deal.

Despite only agreeing to a one-year deal, both sides expressed interests in a possible long term relationship.

"This is an important day for the Milwaukee Brewers," Taylor said. "We are delighted to have the Indianapolis Indians as our top affiliate and are looking forward to establishing a partnership which will last for several years.

"We are looking forward to providing an exciting, winning brand of baseball for the fans of Indianapolis."

The new deal is not the only reason for Brewers fans to be excited.

The Herron Art Gallery opened its doors to nationally known artists Ed Hill and Suzanne Bloom Oct. 6. In their joint collaboration, "A Constructed Forest" is a combination of digital photography and video, emphasizing the ecological impact of deforestation. The second part of the exhibit, "The Trouble With Arcadia," details the ancient Greek myth of Arcadia and its landscape. The artists' exhibits have been seen in 66 cities, 24 states and 11 countries. The exhibit will run through Nov. 8

Local women get an opportunity to learn football from the experts and get a behind-the-scenes look at the Colts organization and its facilities.

By Cyndi Fegate
Staff Writer

More than 600 women from Indianapolis and the surrounding areas gathered at the Colts 101 Fifth Annual Football Class for Women Oct. 6. The event not only presented an opportunity to learn about the game of football, but also gave the women a chance to tour the Colts training facility and chat with the players themselves. Sponsored by Sagamore Health, Coca-Cola and Simon Malls, all proceeds from the event will be donated to womens shelters.

The $35 registration fee included a Colts T-shirt, a ticket to an upcoming game, souvenirs, and a play book. With the play book in hand, the women separated into groups and followed their respective leaders for a tour of the Colts Complex at West 56th Street. Tours of the renovated facilities included the weight and training rooms, the indoor field, the pavilion, film rooms, and the locker room. The first stop on the tour was the film room. Here, Colts linebacker Bertrand Berry amused students with his version of the defensive line. He described the players as "big uglies, middleweights and pencil necks." Berry covered general points of defensive situations, sketching the X's and O's to describe nickel-and-dime defense strategies. "Now, you can impress your husbands on Sunday when you're watching the game," Berry joked. "Asked about his favorite part of the game, Berry smiled and said, "there is no greater feeling in the world than sacking a quarterback." The next classroom was the pavilion, where players gathered for team meals. Here, Bob Lamey, voice of the Indianapolis Colts, explained what impact the media has on the team.

Suarez speaks at SPJ convention

Former host of National Public Radio's Talk of the Nation reveals to The Sagamore that his heritage has both hurt and helped his journalism career.

By JM Brown
Editor in Chief

There's a duality within Ray Suarez. There's the man who says his Latino heritage has served him well in nurturing a career in broadcast journalism. Then there's the man who says he doesn't want "to be held up as a credit to his race" and that his ethnicity has crippled the number of opportunities thrown his way. "It's a wash over the long trajectory of my career," said Suarez, about how being Latino has helped shape his success as much as it has sometimes stalled it. "I didn't think it would pave my way." The former host of National Public Radio's Talk of the Nation, Suarez spoke to reporters, editors, academics and students at the Society of Professional Journalists' national convention at the Westin Hotel Oct. 3. Before heading back to Washington to start his new job as senior correspondent on the PBS news analysis program News Hour, Suarez sat down for an interview following his keynote address during which he delivered a scorching message about the on-going battle within newsrooms to rebuild the credibility of the press. He doesn't think members of his profession in the newsrooms of Middle

First live televised debate provides some fireworks

Peterson takes exception to Gilroy questioning his credibility on sewer issue.

By Doug Jaggers
Assignment Editor

The first televised mayoral candidate debate between Sue Anne Gilroy (R) and Bart Peterson (R), might have shown a glimpse of a feisty race down the homestretch of the campaign.

The half-hour debate, simulcast Oct. 7 on WRTV 6 and WIBC 1070AM, was mundane for much of the time. Both candidates chewed primarily on the basic food groups of political campaigns — crime, taxes and education — but when the issue of waste water treatment and sewer system was brought to the table, the tone changed. After Peterson responded with an accusation that the current administration was using a "scare tactic" telling people the state's requirement would cost the city $8 billion and cause $150 per month sewer bills, Gilroy went on the attack. "I question the credibility of my opponent on this issue, because he

Herron, Liberal Arts students design work for Chancellor

Two IUPUI schools merge talents to create gift for Bertek's Chancellor's Circle.

By Matthew Davis
Managing Editor

The Herron School of Art, in conjunction with the School of Liberal Arts, revealed its latest work Sept. 30.

The piece, however, won't be found in any exhibit or sold to the highest bidder. Instead, the work will be sent to Chancellor Gerald Bekpo and given away as personal gifts. Designed specifically for the Chancellor, the piece is to be the annual gift from Bekpo to the member's of his Chancellor's Circle. Formed in 1992, the Chancellor's Circle is comprised of 65 members of the community who have donated money through the Chancellors office specifically for the IUPUI campus. According to the IU Foundation, individual members must donate $1000 or more and corporations must give at least $2500 in order to become part of the circle. "The gift is simply a sign of appreciation from the Chancellor," said Glenn Bosch, Director of Annual Giving at IUPUI. The piece titled "old Man watch me," is a limited edition, handcrafted book containing a single poem detailing a fishing excursion between a father and a son. The concept of the 12-page book originated over a year ago.

Jaguar goalie shines quietly

■ Sophomore goalkeeper lets game speak for itself in leading men's soccer team

By Ed Holdaway
Sports Editor

He makes difficult saves look easy. He can single-handedly shut down opponents top offensive weapons.

And IUPUI goalkeeper-Armando Femia does it all without saying a word.

"I'm just a quiet person," Femia said. "I show my action on the field, not by my words."

For Femia, his action on the field has been nothing short of amazing this season.

Only a sophomore, Femia finds himself ranking among the nation's elite with his minuscule 0.68 goals against average and his 6.60 saves per game. Nationally, Femia ranks twentieth and eighth in those respective categories.

Many may ask why such a remarkable athlete chose to play for a first year NCAA Division I program as a freshman.

"Because of his personality, he didn't attract as much attention coming out of high school," said Steve Franklin, Jaguars head coach.

But one school that did come knocking at his door was Big Ten powerhouse, Indiana University. The Hoosiers invited Femia to play for them, and offered him the number two goalkeeper job as a freshman.

Instead, Femia chose IUPUI, where he was supposed to be the number three goalkeeper, and expected to redshirt as a freshman.

"It just fit me the best," said Femia as to why he chose IUPUI over IU-Bloomington. "It was closer to home, plus it's Division I school. Many other schools I was looking at were Division II and NAIA."

"We hit the mini lottery with Armando," Franklin said. "But following a 2-0 exhibition loss at DePauw last year, where the Goalkeeper Armando Femia gathers a save in the Sept. 29 match versus Bradley. Femia leads the Mid-Con with 66 saves and a .904 save percentage.

IUPUI senior goalkeepers allowed a pair of "soft" goals, Franklin decided to give Femia the start against their next opponent, — the University of Kentucky.

Despite losing 1-0, Femia played well enough to earn the starting job for the Jaguars for the remainder of the season. The rest fell into place.

"To tell you the truth, I really didn't expect to play as a freshman," Femia said. "I just got the breaks."

One break Femia didn't expect was an injury he suffered midway through the season, forcing him to miss significant playing time.

Thus far, Femia has avoided the injury bug, and been instrumental in the Jaguars recent improvements.

Already, the Jaguars have won two more games this season than in all of 1998.

"Technically, he plays all the angles properly," Franklin said. "You see other keepers making 'theatrical saves,' whereas he makes those saves easily."

"He also wears down opposing teams because here's this quiet guy standing in goal, he's not really flashy, and everything they're throwing at him is getting turned back."

Femia, however, did show a little attitude at the University of Denver Classic. Following a flurry where he made five or six saves in a two minute span, he waved a Dikembe Mutombo-like finger to the disgruntled spectators.

In the University of Denver Classic, Femia was named the defensive MVP only one of the many accolades may receive during his career.

Femia has twice been named the Mid-Continent Conference player of the week this season, the first men's soccer player to do so since 1996.

But for Femia and the Jaguars, the goal is to get where IU-Bloomington was last season, — NCAA champions.

"We've shown we can compete with the best," Femia said. "We have proved a lot."

was Governor (Evan) Bayh's environmental advisor and executive assistant when this permit was issued."

Peterson came back to answer Gilroy during the time he had to answer the next question.

"The people of Indianapolis deserve better than that kind of negative campaigning and that kind of untruthful accusation," Peterson said.

"The fact of the matter is, the permit hasn't even been issued yet."

Peterson hit on the negativity again during his closing remarks. He said he set out at the beginning of his campaign to "run a positive issue-oriented campaign" and was working hard to do that.

"Although I think we showed some differences it was in no way meant to be personal," Gilroy said in her closing remarks.

"We need to be accountable as a candidate and stand up. If you say you've run state government, then you should be able to answer the questions when somebody questions those decisions being made," Gilroy added.

Libertarian candidate Andy Horning and Our Party candidate R. John Gibson were not invited to participate in the televised debate. They did discuss the issues on WIBC later that evening.

COLTS

Lamey also explained to his students how the Colts get into the playoffs.

The next stop on the tour was the indoor field, complete with Astronurf. On the near side of the field, Colts tight end Bradford Banta and offensive lineman Adam Meadows explained the offensive line's responsibilities.

With humor they drew plays on the visual board and helped football students understand the running and passing games.

Banta went on to explain how detrimental fan noise can be.

"Sometimes we can't even hear our quarterback when he's five feet away," said Banta.

"Noise is how we rate the toughest stadium to play in," added Meadows.

Women in the crowd were interested if Edgerin James created animosity among the players during his spring training hold-out.

"Unfortunately, football is a business," said Banta. "He did what was right for his family."

"You can't hold grudges and still win football games," said Meadows. "I respect the guy."

The last stop was the much-anticipated locker room, where women saw a personal side of the Colts. Cleats, shower shoes and dental floss contrasted with pictures of the players' families.

Colts kicker Mike Vanderjagt and punter Hunter Smith were the guides for this tour.

The comical twosome demonstrated equipment. Not all the equipment, but the basics.

Vanderjagt discussed his only superstition; upon entering a stadium, he walks over to one up right and touches it. He then walks down the sidelines to the other up right and touches it.

After completing the tour, women seemed comfortable with their newly amassed football knowledge.

"What impressed me the most was the individual attention we got from the players," said Indianapolis native Chrissy Kapcoe.

Even with so many women in attendance, the players found time to answer questions and sign autographs.

Colts linebacker Bertrand Berry, spoke to over 600 women about defensive strategies at the Colts 101 Fifth Annual Football Class for Women.

For some women, this was their first football workshop. For others it was their third or fourth repeat visit. Regardless, the Colts 101 Fifth An-

INDIANS

Milwaukee will be moving into the new Miller Park prior to the 2001 season, and will host the Major League All-Star Game in 2002.

Despite the subpar seasons posted by the Brewers throughout the decade, the Brewers are taking the appropriate steps towards playoff contention.

"The Brewers are aggressively moving to improve their farm system," Schumacher said. "This will include the acquisition of quality veteran players and the signing and development of younger players. We expect to field a highly competitive team in 2000."

And with the Indians first-class facilities, acquiring players will be an even easier task for the Brewers. In fact, many members of the Brewers' front office compared Victory Field to Jacobs Field in Cleveland and Camden Yards in Baltimore.

"Indianapolis is one of the fine sports towns," Taylor said. "Victory Field is one of the crown jewels if not the crown jewel of minor league baseball."

Milwaukee has had recent success on the Triple-A level. Their Triple-A Louisville affiliate in Louisville made the playoffs in 1998, when they ousted the Indians by a half-game in the standings.

"Our goal is to upgrade efforts in scouting and player development," Taylor said. "We need to change our mindset from the rookie leagues all the way up to the major league level. We plan on raising the level of expectation across the boards."

"This is a step in that direction."

Panel discusses homeless, housing issues in Indianapolis

■ Event brings students and community leaders together in efforts to take action.

HEATHER ALLEN
STAFF WRITER

Housing and homelessness were the topics of a panel discussion at the IU School of Law-Indianapolis Oct. 4 in observance of "First Monday", the opening of the U.S. Supreme Court term.

The event brought students and community leaders together in efforts to take action on housing and homeless issues in Indianapolis.

This year is the 50th anniversary of Congress' declaration of the national housing goal. The Housing Act of 1949's goal was to provide a decent home for every American family.

Florence Roisman, coordinator of the panel discussion and associate professor of law at IUPUI discussed the significance of the event. "The idea was to point out how far we are from reaching that 50 year old goal," said Roisman.

The first phase of a study conducted this year by the Coalition for Homelessness Intervention and Prevention (CHIP) reports that there are an estimated 3,488 people that are homeless in Indianapolis on any given night.

CHIP also estimates an average of 12,500 people in Indianapolis are experiencing homelessness over the course of the year.

"There has never been a scientific study done to measure the homeless in Indianapolis until now," said Stephanie Lowe-Sagebit, employee of CHIP.

CHIP's homeless count and survey project, made possible by a grant from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., has assembled a team of sociologists, and national experts to ensure reliability and appropriate methodology.

Last week, in phase II of the yearlong project, the team began to research the number of people who are "precariously housed," a term used to describe people that are not out on the streets and are not using the shelters, but still do not have a permanent address.

"We have a significant problem here," said Chris Haile, former executive director of Horizon House and panel member. "We certainly have done a poor job in Indianapolis to accommodate the homeless." Ironically, Horizon House, the only daytime shelter for the homeless in downtown Indianapolis, is now in danger of being shut down.

The Indianapolis Housing Agency's believes there is no market for senior housing in downtown Indianapolis, and that the building would be too costly to repair," said Bohannan. "Currently the building is at 51% occupancy, because they were turning people away and refusing to market the building."

The directors of the shelter made many efforts to relocate in search of more room to accommodate the growing demand, but in April the lease expired. With no place to relocate, the Horizon House is currently homeless itself.

In addition to the basic shelter services, Horizon House also offered on-site legal counsel through the ### Homeless Legal Project.

The Tran, a leader in the Homeless Legal Project, also a member of the panel, spoke of the importance of providing such services and encouraged law students to get involved.

"There are many under-publicized reasons for homelessness," said Tran. "Mental illness, substance abuse, wrongful evictions, and lack of affordable housing in Indianapolis are all factors."

Accessibility to housing is also a factor for the elderly and mentally ill. Rodrick Bohannan, lawyer and member of the NAACP spoke on the panel about this issue. Bohannan is representing the residents of the John Barton Senior Housing Complex in their efforts to buy a building currently being used as a housing facility for seniors.

The 20 story, 227-unit building located in downtown Indianapolis, is now in danger of being shut down.

The Indianapolis Housing Agency's believes there is no market for senior housing in downtown Indianapolis, and that the building would be too costly to repair," said Bohannan. "Currently the building is at 51% occupancy, because they were turning people away and refusing to market the building."

The IUPUI panel discussion was one in series of meetings on housing and homelessness which will continue to be held around the city.

School of Informatics waiting for approval

ANDY GAMMILL
INDIANA DAILY STEELER
IU-BLOOMINGTON

Indiana University's first new school in more than 20 years has one more hurdle to clear before it becomes a reality.

Informatics Director Michael Dunn said the School of Informatics is well into planning its curriculum from the IU side, but it still needs approval from the Indiana Commission for Higher Education.

Informatics focuses on teaching the technical aspects of computing and how to use technology to distribute information.

Courses provided in informatics will include software and multimedia design, studying human interaction with computers and mathematical foundations of computing.

"We presented to the Higher Education Commission back in September, and the response was favorable," Dunn said, adding that he was optimistic the Commission would approve the new school.

Deputy Higher Education Commissioner Kent Weldon said he expects the issue to come up at the commission meeting either in October or November.

Bloomington Chancellor Kenneth Gros Louis said he expects the school to fill a void in IU's degree offerings by providing an applied science degree, something that's more in line with Purdue's mission.

"I'm pleased it's here because I've always thought we needed that," Gros Louis said.

He likened the study of informatics to the invention of the printing press. Gros Louis said the real visionaries then were the people who studied how the printing press would change society. He said the same holds true with computers, and a liberal arts campus like Bloomington is a good place to do that.

"It's the ideal place not just to train people for information technology, but to train people to think about information technology," Gros Louis said.

Dunn said he hopes IU will be offering courses in informatics starting in the fall of 2000, although the school won't grant any degrees until at least two years after that.

He said the act of creating a new school is no easy task.

"It's crazy — there's all kinds of problems in existing with all kinds of University structures in existence," said Dunn.

Dunn, for instance, was unable to order a new computer for his office since the school has not been approved and no budget agreed to.

Although details have not been worked out, Dunn said faculty interest has been high, with more than 60 faculty members asking to be a part of the program.

Additional faculty will be a part of informatics when IU's new center on pervasive computing gets off the ground early next year. The University is looking to bring world-renowned scientists to the center, which will study human interaction with computers as well as ways to make microchips smaller, said IU's vice president for information technology, Michael McRobbie.

Dunn, who is on the steering committee for the new center, said he expects some of the faculty who come to the center to also be on the informatics staff.

Inspirational speaker to visit campus

Blind athlete to appear at IUPUI to celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month.

STAFF REPORT

A man who did not let blindness prevent him from becoming a world-class runner will bring his message of inspiration to IUPUI Oct. 12 as part of Hispanic Heritage Month.

George Mendoza Jr. will speak at 6 p.m. in room 115 of University College Building, 815 W. Michigan St. The event is free and open to the public. Associate Director of Campus Interrelations at IUPUI, David Koerner, said Hispanic Heritage Month is only part of the reason Mendoza was asked to speak on campus. Koerner said the main reason for Mendoza's visit is that he is an inspiration to young people. Mendoza lost his sight to a rare eye disease at age 15, but he has gone on to become an accomplished runner, writer and motivational speaker for youth and disabled persons across the country. He represented the US in the Olympics for the physically disabled in 1980 and 1984, setting national and world records in the 800- and 1,500-meter runs.

A published poet, he also wrote an autobiographical screenplay, "The George Mendoza Story," which aired on the Public Broadcasting System. William J. Buchanan's biography of Mendoza, "Running Towards the Light," is set to be made into a motion picture.

Following the approval of the gift, Paula Differding, Director of the IRIS Center for Digital Arts at the Herron School of Art, contacted the School of Liberal Arts in order to locate an original poem for the book.

Many works were submitted from the School of Liberal Arts. Michael Coatney's, poem was the overall favorite.

"When I begin to write the poem, I had no idea that it was for Chancellor Bepko," said Coatney.

"This was a great opportunity to give something back to the university, and knowing that my work was for the Chancellor, makes the whole experience far more exciting," Coatney continued.

After the poem had been completed, Marc Arnold, a student in the Herron School of Art who graduated in May 1999, designed the book.

"This is a great collaboration between the schools at IUPUI," said Differding who directed the project.

Herron, who designed the gift for Bepko last year, has also been contracted to design the Chancellor's annual gift again next year.

"Last year we matted and framed a

Fair festivals bring film, food, culture to Circle City

Several events will fill the calendar this Fall, celebrating everything from films to food.

STAFF REPORT

Fall Funny Film Fest

In celebration of silent comedy films, the Indianapolis Art Center will be hosting the Fall Funny Film Fest throughout the month of October.

The Art Center, located in Broad Ripple, will show a silent comedy film each Tuesday. Showtimes for all films are 7:30 p.m. For a complete list of the scheduled films visit the Art Center's website at www.indpsartcenter.org or call 255-2464.

International Festival of Indiana

The 1999 International Festival of Indiana will be held Oct. 14-16 at the Indiana State Fairgrounds.

This festival will showcase artists, musicians and foods from around the world.

The festival, which has been held in Indianapolis for 22 years, will celebrate the sights, sounds, and tastes of the world.

Exhibits representing Africa, the Americas, Asia and Europe will be on display with interactive activities and demonstrations. A parade of nations will open the event.

A naturalization ceremony, which will present an opportunity to welcome the country's newest citizens, will take place Oct. 15.

The festival also will include a mix of local vendors who will exhibit their ethnic art, food and music.

For more information visit the International Festival's website at www.intfestindy.org, or contact the International center of Indianapolis at 259-7053.

Day of the Dead Festival

The Indiana State Museum will commemorate Mexico's Day of the Dead, a holiday dedicated to the memory of departed loved ones and continuance of life, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Oct. 16.

The free event will include hands-on family activities and crafts. Entertainment will include traditional mariachi music performed by Mariachi Nuevo Jalisco and musical performances by Alejandro Jose and Jorge Valoi. Fiesta Dancers, Flores de Sevilla dancers and San Patricio Dancers will perform throughout the day.

In addition, two-for-one admission passes to The International Festival will be available. For more information call 232-1637.

The Eiteljorg will host a Day of the Dead event from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 30. Families can decorate sugar skulls to take home. The event is free with museum admission. For more information call the museum's education department at 636-9378.

Heartland Film Festival

Founded in 1991, the Heartland Film Festival recognizes and honors filmmakers in international dramatic, children's, and documentary categories. This year, winning films will be shown at the new Heartland Film Festival Theater in the Indiana Historical Society and at General Cinemas-Castleon Arts.

In addition to several premiers, industry workshops, seminars and other special events are scheduled.

The 1999 Heartland Film Festival will run from Oct. 20-28.

For a complete list of movie screenings, ticket prices, workshops and seminars, visit www.heartlandfilmfest.org or call 464-9405.

Historic Irvington Halloween Festival

This historical community street fair features arts, crafts, food, entertainment and a children's costume parade. The festival will take place from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Oct. 31. For more information contact Abby Wood at 357-7849.

Indianapolis Gourmet Festival

The First Annual Indianapolis Gourmet Festival will take place Nov. 12-14 at the Indiana State Fairgrounds. The festival will present gourmet foods as well as gourmet food preparation products.

For additional information visit the Indianapolis Gourmet Festival website at www.gourmetfestival.com or call 726-0961.

Suarez

America are doing a great job of covering the burgeoning Hispanic population in their areas.

"It's pretty bad so far," Suarez said of the news media's attention to Latino life in pockets of the nation just now experiencing surges of new Hispanic residents.

Suarez believes the demographic upwelling of Latino neighborhoods is being covered by the news media in a "Margaret Mead-ish" kind of way. "Send a reporter over there to see who these people are," he said, mimicking an assignment editor from a run-of-the-mill newsroom.

"We owe it to our consumers, to people who already read us" to be better chroniclers of Hispanic issues and "do a good job of explaining where they live is changing."

During the civil rights era, Suarez was trying to navigate a career in broadcast journalism, a field — like many others at the time — that suffered from lack of diversity.

There were few other Latino reporters in the newsrooms of America, so Suarez carved out his own path.

His ethnicity has played an important role in his career, he said, but not so important that it defines his accomplishments.

His Latino heritage may have opened a door or two during his career. "It's not something I shrink from," he said. But ultimately what pushed Suarez into the spotlight was his enormous reputation and his in-demand talent.

Before hosting his popular NPR call-in news program, Suarez, who cofounded the Chicago Association of Hispanic Journalists, worked for seemingly every major broadcast news network that would have him. Seven must be his magic number.

Before joining NPR he was a reporter for WMAQ-TV, the NBC affiliate in Chicago, for seven years.

He also has been a Los Angeles correspondent for CNN, a producer for the ABC radio network in New York and a reporter for CBS Radio in Rome.

Many landmark accomplishments define Suarez's distinguished career.

He did a broadcast live on NPR from Johannesburg during South Africa's premier multinational elections.

Suarez covered the attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II and the release of American hostages from Iran.

It's the work of Suarez and his Hispanic roots that has once again brought his heritage to the forefront.

Pulliam Journalism Fellowships

Graduating college seniors are invited to apply for the 27th annual Pulliam Journalism Fellowships. We will grant 10-week summer internships to 20 journalism or liberal arts majors in the August 1999-June 2000 graduating classes.

We encourage applications from students with a wide variety of backgrounds.

Previous internship or part-time experience at a newspaper is desired, or other demonstration of writing and reporting ability. Those who go through the Fellowships often find new professional opportunities opening up at other newspapers during and after the program. Past Fellows now serve as newspaper publishers, editors and reporters and include several Pulitzer Prize winners. We have been offering the Fellowships since 1974, in an effort to provide a bridge between the classroom and the newsroom.

For the most part, Fellows work as reporters or copy editors, but they also have a chance to attend luncheons with some top names in the business — people such as David Broder, Helen Thomas, Cal Thomas, Tony Snow and Clarence Page. Fellows also receive special attention from a writing coach, and for many of the Fellows, the coaching is the highlight of the program. They learn not only about strengths and weaknesses in their own writing, but also how to get help from editors and peers — their fellow reporters and columnists.

If you win a Pulliam Fellowship, our editors will welcome you with open arms, then open a desk drawer full of ideas they've been wanting someone talented like you to work on.

Winners will receive a $5,500 stipend and will work at either The Indianapolis Star or The Arizona Republic. Opportunities for online training are available, along with reporting experience at our major metropolitan daily newspapers.

Early-admissions application postmark deadline is Nov. 15, 1999. By Dec. 15, 1999, up to five early-admissions winners will be notified. All other entries must be postmarked by March 1, 2000, and will be considered with remaining early-admissions applicants. Successful applicants will be notified on or before April 1, 2000, and will be asked to respond immediately with a letter of intent, at which time one-third of the cash grant will be mailed to the Fellow.

Computer users create chaos

■ Campus needs to crack down on students using terminals for extracurricular activities.

As an educational facility, IUPUI tries to provide its students with the means to further their knowledge through various resources.

The University Library is one of these resources, and unfortunately it's also highly abused.

Located on the top floors of the library are the computer clusters, clusters which are available all day long for student research etc. The problem is, these very machines are often over-run by students who are using them for personal advantages.

At almost any given time of the day, one can go into the cluster area and see nearly every terminal in use. Are the students using them working diligently towards an "A" on an upcoming paper? No. They're playing video games. And when it's not video games, they're messing around in a chat room, looking up the best place to buy a car or something else totally irrelevant to their college education.

This abuse, no matter how minor it may seem, can really throw someone's day for a loop. For example, say you are doing a project at home, which is due in two hours. You go to print and boom! You're out of printer ink. So naturally, you figure now's a good time to take advantage of your technology fee that you're forced to fork over each semester and print your assignment at school. But when you get there you realize that isn't a possibility, due to the mass of "gamers."

This isn't to say that a cluster won't free up within a few minutes, but you don't know that for sure, and you don't have the time to waste waiting.

The computers were put in the library for educational purposes. It's understandable that students might occasionally want to get away from their studies while stuck here on campus, but most of these people are doing this on an almost daily basis, which causes headaches for those trying to use them for their intended purpose.

And when the computers aren't being used by the surfers and gamers, they're broken in some way or another.

Either they're out of paper, frozen up, a pertinent program has been deleted or they just have a permanent "out of order" sign on the monitor.

It's great that the university provides us with these resources, but really, what is the point if they aren't kept up? Why waste precious university dollars on technology if students who have a legitimate reason to use them can't?

As students, is this really what we should expect — to pay high fees and receive the minimum in return?

— Bobby Bell

Covergirls need more cover

■ Young girls nearly in the nude are inappropriate for entertainment magazines.

I was looking at the magazines the other day at the bookstore and suddenly noticed all the nearly- (and some not-so-nearly) naked bodies staring back at me, most of them belonging to young models, some of them less than age 21.

Britney Spears, Jennifer Love Hewitt, Melissa Joan Hart, Neve Campbell, Michelle Williams, Lelee Sobieski, Alyssa Milano - the list goes on. And they all had looks on their faces taken straight out of porno magazines.

What's the deal with that? These girls are barely out of high school and we're putting them naked on the covers of magazines?

And it's not Playboy or any adult magazine like that, but semi-normal ones such as Rolling Stone, Details, MovieLine, Maxim and others.

What is the problem with readers and magazine producers? Britney Spears has been featured in a good portion of this sex press and she's only 17. Doesn't anyone think there's something a little wrong with that? Can someone tell me when the ideal age for a sex kitten fell below the legal drinking age?

We've always been a society that has objectified youth. We've always embraced younger women and discarded the old ones when they are no longer of use to us.

Why do you think it's been so long since Elizabeth Taylor has done anything besides her perfume commercials? This is a sexist society that relies heavily on visual image. But what we've never done to this extent before is sexualize an entire group that was once considered "off-limits" like we have now.

Raguel Welch, Farrah Fawcett and Cindy Crawford were all at least in their late 20s by the time they became sex symbols, but today's are all sex symbols when they hit the public eye, regardless of how old they are.

And it's not just magazines, either. The other day I saw "American Beauty." Kevin Spacey's character is this suburban loser who changes his life after he falls madly in love with his daughter's teenage friend. Please! Believe me, this guy needed an enema more than he needed this 15-year-old girl.

At the video store I work at, do you know how many titles there are that show a young girl sucking a lollipop and the box reads, "He thought she was just there to babysit his kids. He didn't know she could take care of him too."

Ugh. I AUGH.

What kind of sick fantasies do the men in this country have? Do all middle-class sufferers seek the solace of girls a third their ages?

Not all, surely. I want to say to the pushers of this exploitative material, "Don't you feel sleazy? Or at least a little immoral?" I'm so sick of these kinds of stories. They're not real, unless the guy has tons of dough and is about to die. Come on, find a new grave to dig.

The sexist media has long told us what kind of women are attractive: thin, nice face, firm breasts, thin, long legs? Did I mention thin?

And not only have they advocated these false women, they've eliminated all other traces of females resembling real women, except for the few overweight people you see as character actors.

What effect does this have? Do I even need to tell you? We've got young girls with eating disorders, starving themselves so that they can look like the women on the covers of magazines.

And now that the girls on the covers are younger, have breast implants and are more unclad than ever before, what effect is that going to have?

I don't know, but the thought scares me. This needs to stop. Someone needs to say, "Ahorita is not sexy." I want to see real women when I look through magazines or turn on the TV.

I've met too many actresses who looked like they were wasting away to nothing, and to please who? We've made ourselves a joke, creating and cultivating an image that does not exist — one that should not exist.

We can no longer continue to view and judge ourselves according to the imaginations of old men losing touch with reality. And besides, how interesting would life be if we all looked the same?

Ventura slams his approval, image

■ Governors' comments show the ex-wrestler's true colors.

It seems the governor of Minnesota, Jesse Ventura made some interesting comments that "organized religion is a sham and a crutch for weak-minded people," that the perpetrators in the Navy's Tailhook scandal were misunderstood and that he would like to be reincarnated as a 300D bra.

Since he made those comments, his approval rating has gone down by a surprising 19 percentage points. Three out of five people in his state now think he's a bad role model.

I've got one thing to say to that: Well, duh.

That's exactly the reason I wouldn't have voted for Ventura if I lived in Minnesota. I actually agreed with what he's done legislatively, but I could have guessed he was going to eventually say some really stupid things.

Pro-wrestlers depend on shock value and are known for not holding back in their opinions.

Well, Minnesota, you got what you asked for. You're stuck with this kind of nonsense at least until the end of Ventura's term. It's pretty obvious he's not going to seek re-election. No sane politician says that only the weak-minded believe in religion and expects to be re-elected.

In fact, his spokesman told The Associated Press the results of the poll were a relief, they had been expecting much worse.

So, what happens when you elect your governor for shock value and he goes too far?

I wouldn't dare bring up the I-word: he still has a 54 percent approval rating. The answer is that you bunker down and weather the storm and hope your state doesn't go down the drain before you can elect someone else.

Unfortunately, the people who are really left holding the bag on this one are the kind folks from the Reform Party. The current chairman of the party has asked Ventura to leave the party, but he's one of the few successful elected officials they have, and besides party founder H. Ross Perot, the most well-known.

So, while Ventura has his lark up in Minnesota, the rest of the party is facing an image problem: They haven't had too much success, and their one golden boy is turning into a flop.

Let this be a lesson to all those who are tempted to use someone's celebrity status to get their state or party into the limelight: don't.

Who knows what Warren Beatty would say if he was president?
