INDIANA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW - INDIANAPOLIS

Message From the Dean

Dear Alumni and Friends,

My first semester as Dean of the IU School of Law-Indianapolis is coming to a close. It has been a hectic and exhilarating six months! As I have mentioned before, we have a great school—and the longer I am here, the more convinced I am that we have the potential to be one of the finest institutions of legal education in the country.

As you read the articles in this magazine/dean's report, you will see that our school is involved in some very exciting initiatives. You will read about our LL.M. program creating new campuses in Egypt, and you will learn about our many students, faculty and alumni who are making a significant impact, not just in Indiana, but across the country and around the world.

I hope you will take the time to read about the many programs that have taken place at the school so far this year—such as this fall's Conference on Relations Between Congress and the Federal Courts, which featured U.S. Supreme Court Justice Samuel Alito—the fourth Supreme Court Justice to visit Inlow Hall since its dedication in 2001 and the second in the span of five months.

Recently I spent a fair amount of time comparing our financial status with that of other Big Ten law schools, and I have to tell you that it is quite astonishing that our school has been able to maintain its reputation and high quality of programs given that we rank dead last in virtually every financial metric among Big Ten schools. What I am learning is that we are not going to be able to maintain or improve our reputation or our current levels of achievement without significant financial assistance from you—our alumni and friends. Our alumni giving level is at less than 10%, which is extremely low by any measure. Our annual fund income has averaged just over $250,000 for the past five years, and our endowment is under $12 million, both of which are miniscule compared to our peer law schools. I truly hope that you will consider making a year-end gift to the school. If, as you read through this issue of the magazine, you see a program or initiative that you feel is particularly worthwhile, or you simply feel pride in being associated with this fine institution, please use the envelope included in the magazine to support our efforts. We have the potential to be great—but it won't happen without your help.

I also wanted to note that you will find in the magazine a calendar of upcoming events that will take place at the school next semester. I hope that you will take advantage of the opportunity to visit the school and participate in some of these events. I look forward to seeing you at Inlow Hall, and I wish you and yours all the best in 2008!

Very truly yours,

Slywka Leads Commercial Law Reforms in Former Soviet Republics

TERRANCE SLYWKA, '96 was recently named the Chief of Party (head manager) for the Business Environment Improvement Project in Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, and Tajikistan. The four-year project is financed by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and implemented by The Pragma Corporation. The team of local and international lawyers and consultants works with national governments and businesses to reform Soviet era commercial laws and support development of businesses and the free market through improved laws, regulations, procedures, and practices. Slywka says, "We anticipate the success stories book will be completed later this month and will highlight project activities that produced over $146 million in annual cost savings for entrepreneurs through improvements in laws (and administrative process reforms) covering business inspections, foreign investment, government procurement, tax registration, and similar successes at the national and local levels in Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, and Tajikistan."

Law School Hosts First Alumni Events in China

THE LAW SCHOOL HOSTED its first alumni events in China in May and June of this year. Alumni reunions for LL.M. graduates, one in Beijing and another in Shanghai, took place on May 26 and June 2, respectively. Professor Jeffrey Grove, Associate Dean for Graduate Studies, hosted the events, which attracted more than 30 people at each location, including alumni, several family members, prospective students, and local professionals. Dean Grove called both events a great success and said, "We have a very loyal corps of alumni in China."

Dean Grove says the school hopes to conduct receptions in China on an annual basis and develop alumni chapters in other countries as the number of alumni increases. The LL.M. program has more than 160 alumni from 36 countries. Anyone interested in learning about the alumni chapters in China may contact Assistant Dean Claire Grove (cjgrove@iupui.edu), Chen Jia in Beijing (jiachenly@yahoo.com), or Cui Jipeng in Shanghai (cuijip@yahoo.con.cn). Ms. Chen, '04, is the first Chinese national to be appointed to a position in the political division of the U.S. Embassy in Beijing. Mr. Cui, '05, is an associate with Lehman, Lee & Xu.

Law School to Collaborate with Korean Faculty in Future

WORKING THROUGH TWO KOREAN ALUMNI of the law school, Da Won Kim, '07 and Hee Won Han, LL.M '07, Professor Jeffrey Grove, Associate Dean for Graduate Studies, entered negotiations with Dongguk University Faculty of Law, located in Seoul, South Korea, and prepared a general Memorandum of Understanding calling for both schools to consider various kinds of cooperation. For example, IU Law-Indianapolis will consider offering Dongguk law graduates scholarship assistance in the LL.M. program, while Dongguk will consider how it might assist in promoting the LL.M. program in Korea. Commitments to specific cooperative measures will be based on future agreements. Dean Sang-Young Lee, of the Dongguk law faculty, traveled to Indianapolis to participate in further discussions and to sign the general MOU. Dean Gary Roberts and Dean Lee met on November 19, 2007, and affixed their signatures. Dean Roberts said, "Dean Lee and I engaged in a useful exchange of ideas that we hope will form the basis for a successful, mutually beneficial partnership at several levels."

Indiana University Inaugurates 18th President

MICHAEL A. MCROBBIE was formally inaugurated as the 18th president of Indiana University on Thursday, October 18. Thousands of faculty, staff, students, dignitaries, and friends of IU were on hand as McRobbie accepted the jewel and chain of office and offered his vision for the future of Indiana University. He announced several new initiatives, including an extensive building plan. "My goal for Indiana University should neither be surprising nor controversial," he said. "It is to confirm our traditions of excellence in our two fundamental missions of education and research."

The new leader of Indiana University formerly served as interim provost and vice president for academic affairs at IU Bloomington. A senior administrator at IU for 10 years, McRobbie came to the university in January 1997 as vice president for information technology and chief information officer. Six years later, he was given the additional responsibilities of vice president for research. McRobbie, 56, a native of Australia, replaced Adam W. Herbert. The inauguration was the highlight of "Celebrate IU Week," which included numerous activities on IU's campuses.

Law School and Professor López Receive Rabb Emison Awards

INDIANA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW - INDIANAPOLIS Professor María Pabón López was honored recently at the Indiana State Bar Association's Annual Meeting as a recipient of the Rabb Emison Award. Sponsored by the ISBA Diversity Committee, the award recognizes a group or individual for "demonstrated commitment to promoting diversity and/or equality in the legal profession." Since June of 2003, Professor López has been an appointed member of the Indiana Supreme Court's Court Interpreter Certification Advisory Board, a project of the Race and Gender Fairness Commission. She is also a member of the Latino Affairs Committee of the Indiana State Bar. The Indiana University School of Law - Indianapolis also received the Rabb Emison Award for the overall efforts of the school and "in recognition of the significant contribution made in advancing opportunities for minority lawyers in legal employment and the legal profession."

Law School Alumni Become Deputy Attorneys General

LAW SCHOOL 2007 GRADUATES Amber Degenhart, Myron Rahn, and Joseph Delamater (shown above), became Deputy Attorneys General for the State of Indiana on November 5 at a swearing-in ceremony officiated by Attorney General Steve Carter.

"We're excited to welcome this bright group of young attorneys to the office to work on behalf of the citizens," Carter said. "Indiana University School of Law - Indianapolis is a top notch program that consistently produces talented and skilled minds." Approximately 40% of the attorneys in the Attorney General's office are graduates of IU Law-Indianapolis.

Paul Cox, Vice Dean and Centennial Professor of Law, attended the ceremony. "We are honored by the presence of Indiana Attorney General, Steve Carter, and we are pleased to be able to host the swearing in of these three alumni of our school. These graduates are to be commended for using their legal skills for the greater good of the community—and the state," said Dean Cox.

Delamater works in the Criminal Appeals Section of the office. Degenhart is employed in the Consumer Protection and Tobacco Enforcement Divisions. Rahn serves in the Homeowner Protection Unit and Professional Licensing Division.

Transcending Personal Glory

by Elizabeth Allington

IN THE COURTROOM or on the battlefield, Lt. Col. Bert Owens, '02 believes in, as he puts it, “transcending personal glory” and putting in the time and effort for his clients as well as his country. Owens will soon be putting his legal career as a family law attorney in Indianapolis on hold—for the second time in two years—to serve his country, this time in Iraq.

Owens is one of the 3,400 men and women of the Indiana National Guard mobilized on December 10th and scheduled to ship out to Iraq in March of 2008. This will be the largest guard deployment from Indiana since World War II. Owens admits it is hard being away but says he is blessed with friends and colleagues who look out for his family and his professional interests while he is away, making it much easier for him to concentrate on the job he has to do overseas. The attorneys with whom he shares office space are once again supporting Owens, as they did in 2005 when he served his first combat mission in Afghanistan, by keeping his office space reserved, as well as helping out with some of his clients while he is away. “That is really a lot to ask,” says a grateful Owens.

Balancing his commitment to the law with his obligations to the military are nothing new for Owens. A 28-year veteran of the Army National Guard, he was on active duty the entire time he was an evening student at the law school (1998-2002). While in school, Owens found time not only to work and attend class, “Fatigue is not an option. You do what you need to do to get the job done—even if you have to stay up all night.”

- BERT OWENS

but to participate in the Order of the Barristers (including a competition in New York City), trial advocacy competitions, and the Dean’s Advisory Board. Owens says that he “always wanted to go to law school” and that while working as a State Trooper in Northern Indiana he found his occasional appearances in the courtroom intriguing and thought, “I could do that!” His opportunity to pursue a legal education came when he was transferred to Indianapolis, where he was admitted to the law school as a CLEO fellow.

It is clear when talking with Owens that he puts his all into everything he does. That is the way he approached law school, the way he approaches the practice of law now, and the way he has always approached his military service. Of working as a lawyer and as a soldier he says, “Fatigue is not an option. You do what you need to do to get the job done—even if you have to stay up all night.” He says it is not uncommon for him to only sleep four hours per night.

Two years ago after returning from Afghanistan where he was wounded in the left hand and arm, he announced plans to retire from the military in 2007. Yet, here he is getting ready to accompany his troops overseas for another tour of duty, this time in a potentially more hostile environment. Owens knows some of what to expect when he gets to Iraq, but he also knows there are some significant differences. The language, customs, and climate are all different, not to mention the political situation on the ground. Not only will he and the other soldiers face a harsher desert climate, but a much more complicated sectarian situation as well.

He says he does not anticipate the same level of cooperation or trust between American troops and Iraqis as he and his soldiers enjoyed while in Afghanistan where they were literally embedded with Afghan troops.

He credits his legal background with helping him negotiate potentially difficult situations he encounters while in combat. He says law school improved his ability to listen, to reason and to communicate, which are all advantages not only in court but “in country” as well. Communicating with his own soldiers, as well as with local people, are major challenges to accomplishing the mission, he says, and “thinking like a lawyer” can help a lot. “Having a law degree has done wonders for my credibility in the military,” he says. Plus, he admits, “law is cool” and gives him an intellectual edge when dealing with people.

While Owens is not allowed to divulge exactly where he will be deployed, he says it is an area of Iraq that is well known. He also cannot say exactly what the mission will be this time, but he characterizes it as a “robust” one. Luckily, he is going with experienced troops, many of whom have been to Afghanistan, Bosnia or other combat zones in recent years. He says his group is also going well prepared and well equipped.

“You don’t get to choose if you come back or not,” he says, but his main concern is for the men and women under his command. He says, “They are like my children.” And he feels a great responsibility to them.

Unlike his service in Afghanistan, where communication was limited due to the rural setting and lack of infrastructure, this new mission will be in a mature theater and he knows he will most likely be based in a place where he will have daily access to e-mail and phone communication. Owens says he intends to spend a lot of his free time in Iraq online, keeping in touch with family and friends, as well as keeping up with legal developments back home.

The 52-year-old is looking to slow down a bit, however, and plans to retire from the military when he returns from his next tour of duty. Although he admits, “It will be very tempting to stay on if they offer me full Colonel status!”

Yet he looks forward to the time when he can concentrate his considerable efforts on one area and be the best in that area. That’s really all he has ever wanted to do, he says, to be the best at whatever he does. Owens knows he has had mentors and role models in the family law field and, he says, “I want other attorneys to look at me some day and say, ‘I want to be like Bert Owens, he’s the best.’” ■

“Both branches have an obligation to try to rise above and to counteract the cynicism about the government that is such a strong feature of our popular culture today.”

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Samuel A. Alito, Jr., gave the keynote address at the conference on legislative-judicial relations at the law school in September.

Conference Focuses on Relations Between Congress and the Federal Courts

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT JUSTICE, Samuel A. Alito, Jr., gave the keynote address at a conference on “Relations Between Congress and the Federal Courts,” on September 14 at the law school. His remarks focused on reasons for the tensions between the (federal) judicial and legislative branches and ways to improve communication. Alito said, “It is really important for these two branches to make an effort to try to understand each other.” He also suggested, “Both branches have an obligation to try to rise above and to counteract the cynicism about the government that is such a strong feature of our popular culture today.”

The one-day event was hosted by the Indiana State Bar Association. In addition to Justice Alito, members of Congress and the judiciary gathered to discuss the topic of improving communication and relations between the two branches of government. An audience of more than 150 attorneys and judges attended the event in the Wynne Courtroom, where IU School of Law – Indianapolis faculty, Professor Gerard Magliocca and Associate Dean Jeff Grove also spoke, as well as Dean Gary Roberts.

A morning panel included U.S. Representatives Mike Pence, ’86, Baron Hill and Brad Ellsworth, who discussed issues from Capital Hill’s perspective, such as congressional oversight and the independence of the judiciary. A panel of Federal judges convened in the afternoon session to discuss the issues from the point of view of the bench, including the differing relations the two branches of government have with the media and the influence that has on public perception of judicial actions. The judicial panel included Hon. Randall T. Shepard, Chief Justice of the Indiana Supreme Court; Hon. Larry McKinney, Chief Judge of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana; Hon. Robert Miller, Jr., ’75, Chief Judge of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana; and Hon. Sarah Evans Barker, U.S. District Judge for the Southern District of Indiana and President of the Federal Judges Association. ■

Hon. Timothy Baker, U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, presided over the afternoon session of the conference.

Law School Launches LL.M. Program in Egypt

by Diane Brown

WITH CLASSES SCHEDULED TO START IN JANUARY 2008, the IU School of Law-Indianapolis will become the first and only U.S. law school to offer a graduate law degree program in the Middle East. The school will offer the international and comparative law track of its LL.M. program at two law schools in Egypt: Alexandria University—Faculty of Law and Cairo University—Faculty of Law.

- PROFESSOR FRANK EMMERT

As part of its initiative to help Egypt modernize its economy and its legal system, the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) has awarded the Indiana law school a three-year, $6.7 million grant to operate the U.S. Master of Laws (LL.M.) Program in Egypt.

“This is a groundbreaking collaboration between an American law school and two of the leading law schools in the Middle East,” says program director and IU School of Law-Indianapolis Professor Frank Emmert. IU School of Law-Indianapolis was unique in its bid for the USAID grant, said Emmert, who is also executive director of the Center for International and Comparative Law at the Indianapolis law school. “We plan to develop essentially an island of excellence in these universities. And we know we will learn as much from our Egyptian partners as they will from us.”

The U.S. Master of Laws Program will target graduates of the four-year bachelor of laws programs at the two Egyptian universities, along with practicing attorneys and judges in Egypt. The program is planned to open with 25 students in each location in January, but will later come under a 70-student cap. “In order to maintain a high quality program with an interactive and intense format, we will need to limit enrollment,” Emmert said.

Graduates of the program are anticipated to play a significant role in on-going efforts to improve Egypt’s economy and legal system. USAID is working with Egyptian officials to help “re-write” or modernize that country’s legislation and government policies with a view toward the business sector, according to Emmert. To do so, the country needs lawyers who are qualified to handle international business transactions, modern corporate laws and commercial transactions.

Dean Gary Roberts commented, “Through this program, the IU Indianapolis law school will play a central role in building bridges between the Middle East and the U.S. as our graduates become legal, political, and business leaders in Egypt and other countries around the Middle East, a region of the world that has become of critical importance to the United States.” ■

Professor Frank Emmert, executive director of the law school's Center for International and Comparative Law, addressed the audience at the signing ceremony in Egypt in October.

United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces Hears Oral Argument in Wynne Courtroom

ON WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24, the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces traveled for the first time to an Indiana law school to hear oral argument as part of its Project Outreach. The case was United States v. Walter S. Stevenson, Hospitalman Third Class, U.S. Navy (retired) and was presented in the Wynne Courtroom at the law school. Through Project Outreach, the court travels throughout the country to law schools, military bases and military academies as a way to inform law students and others about the workings of the court.

One facet of Project Outreach is that it provides an opportunity for law students at the hosting schools to participate in the oral argument as student amicus curiae under the supervision of a member of the court's bar. The amicus curiae submit a brief on behalf of the position taken by one of the parties and may move to present oral argument during the formal hearing. The court typically provides 10 minutes for this oral argument. Third-year law student Christopher Eckhart submitted a brief and argued for the appellant. He was assisted in his preparations by Professor Joel Schumm, '98.

Counsel for the appellant was an alumnus of the law school, Lieutenant Commander Eric Eversole, '98, JAGC, U.S. Navy.

Derek Butler, lieutenant JAGC, U.S. Navy, represented the government in the case. Following the arguments, the members of the court and the counsel answered questions from the audience. The judges indicated that over the years, the student arguments have been very good. At the conclusion of the question and answer session, the judges presented a lithograph of their courthouse in Washington, D.C. to Vice Dean Paul Cox, who accepted it on behalf of the school. ■

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces' visit to the law school was the first visit to an Indiana law school in the court's history.

Professor Craig Haney Spoke on ‘Supermax’ Confinement

THE FIRST LECTURER in the school’s Distinguished Speaker Series for 2007-08 was Professor Craig Haney of the University of California, Santa Cruz, who spoke on the topic, “Prisoners of Isolation: The Psychological and Legal Implications of ‘Supermax’ Confinement,” on October 23 in the Wynne Courtroom. One of the principal researchers on the highly publicized “Stanford Prison Experiment” in 1971, Professor Haney has, since that time, studied the psychological effects of living and working in prison environments.

His work has taken him to dozens of maximum security prisons across the United States and in several different countries, where he has evaluated conditions of confinement and interviewed prisoners about the mental health consequences of incarceration. For more than 25 years, he has studied the backgrounds and social histories of persons accused or convicted of serious violent crime. In his lecture, he shared information related to his scholarly writing and empirical research, addressing psychological mechanisms by which prisoners adjust to incarceration, and the adverse effects of prolonged imprisonment, especially under severe conditions of confinement.

His work has been published in a variety of journals, including the American Psychologist, Psychology, Public Policy, and Law, and the Stanford Law Review. Additionally, Professor Professor Craig Haney lectured at the school on October 23.

Haney is the author of two books, DEATH BY DESIGN: CAPITAL PUNISHMENT AS A SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGICAL SYSTEM, and REFORMING PUNISHMENT: PSYCHOLOGICAL LIMITS TO THE PAINS OF IMPRISONMENT, which was nominated for a National Book Award in 2006. ■

Honorable Dan Coats Speaks of Experiences As Ambassador to Germany

ON NOVEMBER 13, former U.S. Senator Dan Coats, '72, spoke on the topic, “The Changing Role of the U.S. Ambassador to Germany in a Post-9/11 World.” In his lecture, Coats talked about his experience as the U.S. Ambassador to Germany, from his first day on the job—September 10, 2001, and through the days, weeks and months that followed the attacks on the United States on September 11. His remarks addressed the delicate issues that arose during that time period and how he and his staff members dealt with them. “We knew that we were the face of America in Germany,” he said, and told the story of seeing hundreds of people outside the Embassy, kneeling and praying, following the attacks. Coats explained how originally, they had conceived of a plan to spend four months establishing new processes for dealing with security issues—and how that four-month plan was compressed into four days. He also discussed his personal experience as a father, attempting to assess the safety of his own family from halfway around the world, immediately following the attacks.

An alumnus of the law school, Coats is currently senior counsel for the international law firm, King and Spalding. Prior to joining the firm, he served as U.S. Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany from 2001-2005. He represented Indiana in the U.S. Senate from 1989 to 1999 and in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1981 to 1988. ■

Wellness and the Law

Program on Law and State Government Fellowship Symposium Focuses on Public Health Crisis

by Jonna Kane MacDougall

OBESITY. SMOKING. SEDENTARY LIFESTYLES. These public health issues are faced by Americans in every state in the country. On October 5, the law school's Program on Law and State Government (PLSG) addressed these problems in its annual Fellowship Symposium. PLSG Student Fellows Sally Hubbard and Samuel Derheimer conceived of the idea and produced the symposium that drew nearly 100 participants to Inlow Hall.

The luncheon keynote speaker, Mary Hill, '94, General Counsel and Deputy Commissioner for the Indiana State Department of Health, brought the problem home. Her talk, "Women, Girls and Smoking: Dispelling the Myths, Countering the Messages," detailed Indiana Department of Health initiatives to combat the effects of smoking on women in Indiana. She stressed that policy change is the most effective way to battle public health problems. According to Hill, smoking is the leading cause of preventable death in Indiana, taking the lives of 9,700 Hoosiers annually. Twenty-two percent of adult women in Indiana are smokers, resulting in $750.6 million in direct smoking-related healthcare costs in the state. Hill sees tobacco companies and their increased marketing efforts toward women as a significant problem.

"Tobacco companies target women in their advertising," she said. "Smoking is poison. It poisons every organ, every system, every tissue in our bodies. When your product kills your consumers, you need to cultivate new consumers to use your product for your revenue to grow. In this case, tobacco companies cultivate new customers to become smokers because every year approximately 400,000 of their customers die." Hill reviewed the history of marketing cigarettes toward women. She also highlighted current cultural trends that depict smoking as glamorous, making it attractive to young women. In Indiana middle schools, 8.3% of girls smoke, as opposed to 7.1% of boys. She concluded her remarks by pointing out efforts of the Department of Health to fight this trend, such as the "Influence

Mary Hill, '94, General Counsel and Deputy Commissioner for the Indiana State Department of Health, gave the keynote address.

Women's Health Forum," that provides resources for individuals and groups within the state to assist the effort toward smoking prevention.

Other featured speakers at the symposium were Professor Russell Pate, Associate Vice President for Health Sciences at the University of South Carolina; Professor Kevin W. Mary Hill used a series of advertisements to illustrate how tobacco companies have targeted the female consumer throughout the years.

“Smoking is poison. It poisons every organ, every system, every tissue in our bodies. When your product kills your consumers, you need to cultivate new consumers... for your revenue to grow. In this case, tobacco companies cultivate new customers to become smokers because every year approximately 400,000 of their customers die.”

Alumna Making a Difference in New Orleans

by Anita Day

AS STATEWIDE VOLUNTEER COORDINATOR for The Pro Bono Project in New Orleans, Sandie McCarthy-Brown, '05, oversees six attorneys and 1,500 volunteers. By year's end, the staff's average caseload will have tripled from what it was just over two years ago. Their existing budget doesn't even come close to meeting their expanded needs and there are days when McCarthy-Brown feels besieged. Yet she continues her work, confident that she is helping people rebuild their lives. Welcome to post-Katrina New Orleans.

McCarthy-Brown initially traveled to Louisiana in early 2006 to volunteer as a mediator between insurance companies and insureds following the devastation of Hurricane Katrina. The program through which she volunteered was cancelled so she joined the staff of The Pro Bono Project, a nonprofit organization providing free, civil legal services to the poor in several parishes.

Her interest in social justice, however, was evident long before she traveled to New Orleans, even before she entered law school. Her law studies helped foster her strong interest. “My primary influence to work for social justice in the area of poverty law was Professor Florence Roisman,” McCarthy-Brown notes. “She focused my attention on the social inequities caused by poverty—more than any other category—of social injustice. This demonstrated for me the complexities and, often unintended, consequences of legislative, administrative, and policy-making action. I felt that IU Law-Indy fostered a general sense of duty to provide services to all members of the community regardless of ability to pay.”

Discussing her current workload and need for additional help post-Katrina, she says, “It’s a monumental task and we’re looking to hire additional staff.” The situation following the storm was daunting. “There was an outpouring of out-of-state volunteers, but we weren’t even in a position to receive them.” There weren’t practices or policies put in place to accept, direct, or deploy volunteers for a situation of this magnitude. They started from scratch. First, out-of-state volunteers had to learn Louisiana law. Then lobbying efforts were needed to receive court approval for the Supplemental Emergency Pro Bono Civil Legal Assistance Rule. The rule permits non-admitted lawyers to provide limited pro bono civil legal services to victims of Hurricane Katrina under restricted circumstances.

As the Project continues to accept support from out-of-state law firms and law schools, it has found itself serving as a national model for dealing with the legal issues that arise in a natural disaster. “We have to be flexible here because every day is different,” McCarthy-Brown says. She sees displaced children needing to be reunited with their custodial parents—marriages dissolving because of the stress—people losing their homes because deeds were in their ancestors’ names. All of this translates into legal action. McCarthy-Brown and her colleagues continue to need help and have put a program in place for volunteers to work remotely from their own states. “People can come here for a week or two, get a feel for the city, learn to do the case, and then work remotely. Or they can serve as a point person for volunteers who can’t get to New Orleans,” she says. Even with the daily struggles she faces, McCarthy-Brown is in this for the long haul because she knows she’s making a difference. Her conviction to social injustice remains strong. “I’m committed to this forever.” ■

Law Students Win Asylum Case On Behalf of Burmese Applicant

by Alicia Dean Carlson

BORN TO AN ETHNIC MINORITY family in Burma, Zar Ni Maw endured the assassinations of her parents, years on the run in the Burmese jungle, and life in a refugee camp.

Finally safe in the United States, Zar Ni started her senior year at Oberlin College facing yet another trauma: her initial application for political asylum had been denied, and removal proceedings had begun. She would have to return to Burma—also known as the Union of Myanmar—and to a government hostile to her ethnic background and her family's political activity.

A second attempt to win asylum was scheduled for October 4 in Chicago, where Zar Ni would have to make her appeal to Judge Robert Vinikoor.

The first time Zar Ni had applied, she'd been alone. This time, law students would represent her. Keri Gresk and Lun Kham from the newly created Immigration Law Clinic at the IU School of Law-Indianapolis were supervised by Linda Kelly Hill, the M. Dale Palmer Professor of Law.

For Kham, who is also from Burma, the case hit close to home. Kham had enough personal experience with the lack of freedom in Burma to know that Zar Ni could be in real danger. Kham had come to the United States—and Indianapolis—to attend college in 2001 because she'd been denied that opportunity in Burma.

"I know exactly what she is going through, what her family went through with the government," Kham said. "Our family is Christian, which is a minority ethnic group, and we would be persecuted there. It inspired me to find a new future here.

"But Zar Ni's situation was worse. She grew up in a refugee camp and her parents were murdered by military government when she was seven or eight," Kham said. "She is a remarkable woman."

Preparing a Case

All three women were nervous as they prepared for the asylum hearing.

While Zar Ni felt comfortable with Kham, she was reluctant to tell her story to most strangers. Gresk felt sure that Zar Ni's guarded emotions would hurt her testimony.

"When I first met with Zar Ni, in all honesty, I was nervous about her case," Gresk said. "Because of everything she had been through, she had an emotional wall up. We had to get her to come across as a believable person, yet there was this cultural barrier. She did not want to seem weak."

Zar Ni acknowledges that she wasn't comfortable talking to many people about her life in Burma.

"I did not feel comfortable discussing my case or my information,” Zar Ni said. “Lun is Burmese, so it is free for me to discuss and say openly. For the first day, Keri and I did not discuss straight about my case but spent time just getting to know her. By the end, I felt like they were on my side.”

Eventually, Kham and Gresk were able to help Zar Ni tell her story about being born in the jungle while her family was on the run for their pro-democracy activities, and how, after her parents were murdered, she was sent to a refugee camp. They documented Zar Ni’s own political activism including an interview she gave to Radio Free Asia in which she encouraged other young refugees to study and work for a democratic Burma.

“I am sure that if I do not get asylum and am deported back to Burma, I would be arrested,” Zar Ni said.

Burma in the Headlines

Despite their preparation, the odds of being granted asylum were not good. Zar Ni’s request had been denied once. In 2006, 60 percent of all U.S. asylum cases were denied. Judge Vinikoor’s 75 percent denial rate was even higher.

“It was a little terrifying,” Gresk confessed.

Coincidentally, at the time of the October hearing, Burma had been making headlines for weeks, as thousands of Buddhist monks led anti-government protests. The government retaliated by arresting and attacking protesters. Official reports counted 10 deaths in a crackdown on September 27, but foreign diplomatic sources have recorded at least twice as many deaths and many wounded, including some brutal incidents of violence against Buddhist monks and pro-democracy activists.

“Given the current events, our hearing, which had been scheduled for more than a year, was exceptional,” Professor Kelly

“When I first met with Zar Ni, in all honesty, I was nervous about her case. Because of everything she had been through, she had an emotional wall up. We had to get her to come across as a believable person, yet there was this cultural barrier. She did not want to seem weak.”

- KERI GRESK, 3L

Hill said. “Still, winning an asylum case is never an easy task.”

But the hearing went smoothly. Zar Ni answered all of Judge Vinikoor’s questions, and he never called the five witnesses that Kham and Gresk had located and prepped to testify.

They won. Zar Ni Maw would be allowed to stay in the United States.

“Ms. Kham and Ms. Gresk did an extraordinary job weaving together and documenting our client’s life story,” Professor Kelly Hill said.

Gresk and Kham agree that the asylum hearing was a great experience for two law students. Both plan to practice law in Indianapolis, and both may incorporate immigration law into their practices.

Zar Ni plans to pursue her undergraduate degree in sociology and hopes to work with the sizable Burmese population in Indiana as a social worker.

“I feel very safe here,” Zar Ni said. “I am really happy I got asylum. It is my first time to have legal status in any country, ever.” ■

IMMIGRATION CLINIC

The law school’s Immigration Clinic was founded in January, 2006, by Professor Linda Kelly Hill, the M. Dale Palmer Professor of Law. Clinic students represent non-detained immigrants in immigration matters under the supervision of Professor Kelly Hill. In 2007, the clinic received a grant from the Vera Institute of Justice, Inc. to expand its efforts to include implementing and operating a Legal Orientation Program for unaccompanied immigrant children residing in Vincennes, Indiana.

Class of 1938 Alumnus is a Class Act

by Anita Day

TO HEAR MERTON STANLEY, '38, talk, you wouldn't necessarily think he had a strong academic start. "I graduated eighteenth from the bottom in my high school class," he says. Then he grins, and adds, "There were 19 in my class." There's no denying, Merton Stanley has a sense of humor. "My teachers in high school said I should be a lawyer. One said, 'You're always talking or arguing. You'd make a good lawyer.'" So he went to law school. That was in 1935.

Stanley enrolled at the Benjamin Harrison Law School. "It was run by 16 practicing lawyers in a rental space on South Meridian Street," he recalls. "My class was the last one that didn't require you to have preliminary studies. You had to have a high school diploma." He attended classes three nights a week for three years. The school later merged with the Indiana Law School, becoming part of Indiana University in 1944.

Stanley graduated in 1938 and began practicing law in Kokomo, Indiana, close to where he was raised. His law practice was interrupted by World War II. Stanley speaks of the responsibility he felt to defend his country and of his friends who perished in the war. Even now, he becomes emotional. "I'm so very fortunate that I got to come home without ever having seen combat."

Stanley was honorably discharged and returned to his practice in Kokomo. The following years were punctuated with unforgettable experiences—serving as a circuit court judge, director of the Indiana Public Service Commission, and state senator. In 1948, at age 31, he was elected Howard Circuit Court Judge in Howard County, where he served two terms. A copy of his 1949 tax return shows that he made $6,850 that year. "Times have changed," he laughs.

"The thing I enjoyed the most about being a judge was presiding over adoptions because in a lot of those cases you were taking children who were cast aside and seeing them have a chance—where they might not ever have had a chance before," he says.

Running for a third term as judge, Stanley received seventy-eight percent of the vote. He also received a telephone call from then-governor, Matthew Welsh. "He wanted me to take the position as chairman of the Indiana Public Service Commission," Stanley says. Committed to his voters, he initially declined the governor's offer. "I had just been elected to a third term and didn't feel I should take it." Colleagues changed his mind. Stanley served as chairman from 1961 until 1967. In 1970 he ran for state senator because, as he explains, "I liked public service so much and thought if I was going to do anything else politically, I would run for senator." He won by 46 votes and served in the senate for eight years. "The best part about being in the senate," he says, "was the friendships you formed with both parties."

In his 90 years, Merton Stanley has done well for someone who graduated eighteenth from the bottom in his high school class. While many things have changed during his lifetime, his sense of humor remains intact. "There's more to life than money," he laughs, "You've never seen a Brink's truck trailing behind a hearse, have you?" ■

■ Annual Report of Private Giving 2006-2007

In January of 2006 we made the decision to change our annual giving year from a calendar year to a fiscal year in order to coordinate with Indiana University's budget process. In order to make the change, we decided to count all gifts received between January 1, 2006 and June 30, 2007 for the donor societies listed in this report. For one year only, we had an 18-month giving calendar. Moving forward, the annual giving calendar will be July 1st through June 30th. The Annual Law Firm and Corporate Campaign 2006

Each year alumni in a number of law firms and corporations participate in the Annual Law Firm and Corporate Campaign. A volunteer chair is recruited from each firm or corporation, and they are asked to solicit contributions from fellow alumni in their office. This annual campaign is vital to the law school's annual fund and is by far our most successful fund raising drive of the year. Thank you to the 2006 Campaign Chairs and everyone who participated in the 2006 Law Firm and Corporate Campaign. We would especially like to recognize the firms with the highest percentage of participation as well as the firms and corporations who are recognized for their total dollars contributed in the 2006 campaign.

The Indiana University School of Law – Indianapolis salutes the 40 firms and corporations and the 420 alumni who participated in the 2006 Law Firm and Corporate Campaign. Highlighted below are the top firms and corporations.

Spirit of Philanthropy Award

THE NINETEENTH ANNUAL IUPUI SPIRIT OF PHILANTHROPY LUNCHEON, sponsored jointly by The Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University, the IU Foundation, and the IUPUI campus, took place on Thursday, April 26, 2007 at the Scottish Rite Cathedral-Grand Ballroom in Indianapolis. Each school on the Indianapolis campus honored individuals or entities that provided exemplary voluntary service or financial support to the school. The event was attended by several hundred civic and community leaders, as well as IUPUI Chancellor Charles R. Bantz. The law school's honorees were Hon. J. Patrick Endsley, '56 and Alan I. Klineman, '56.

The law school honored Judge Pat Endsley for his long-term support of the school. His impressive career in public service includes more than 15 years as a U.S. Magistrate Judge. He also served as Lawrence clerk/treasurer; Marion County deputy prosecutor; Indianapolis assistant city prosecutor; Marion Circuit Court judge and chief deputy attorney general for the State of Indiana. In 1990, Judge Endsley received the Distinguished Alumni Service Award from the law school.

The law school also honored Alan I. Klineman for his long-standing commitment to the school. Klineman attended law school after serving in the U.S. Army Reserves. Only a few years out of school, he co-founded the firm of Klineman, Rose, Wolf and Wallack, where he worked for 33 years before retiring in 1992. His community activities are numerous and include, most notably, serving on several state and local planning and zoning groups, and an impressive list of local cultural and philanthropic causes. He received the law school's Distinguished Alumni Service Award in 1996. ■

Friends To Each Other and the Law School

Hon. J. Patrick Endsley, '56, and Alan I. Klineman, '56, established endowed scholarships at the law school.

“We have to train new lawyers who will take care of the poor and middle class, not just those who need estate planning,”

- HON. J. PATRICK ENDSLEY

Klineman and Endsley Fund Student Scholarships

by Alicia Dean Carlson

IT'S NOT EASY for J. Patrick Endsley, '56, and Alan I. Klineman, '56, to get through an interview without laughter.

The jokes begin as a photographer asks them to pose for a photo and continue nonstop through reminiscences of law school and jests about politics and personalities.

"I got through law school and at graduation someone said something about the law library," Endsley says. "Law library?" I asked. "Is that what that room was?"

Klineman, of course, laughs along.

It's familiar fare at the Indianapolis restaurant where they regularly meet with fellow members of ODADY (Old Democrats Aren't Dead Yet), a group of their retired cronies.

Both men have endless fodder for such stories, thanks to fascinating careers. Endsley is a retired United States Magistrate Judge for the Southern District of Indiana and former Marion County Circuit Court Judge. Klineman, founder and former senior partner of Klineman, Rose, Wolf and Wallack, served as an Indiana state senator from Marion County, as a deputy prosecutor, and as chairman of the Indiana Gaming Commission.

But Endsley and Klineman are serious about at least one thing: their recent gifts to the IU School of Law-Indianapolis.

Klineman and his wife, Dorothy, established the Alan I. Klineman Scholarship in 2007 for an incoming law student and resident of Indiana.

The J. Patrick and Eleanor L. Endsley Scholarship was established in 2007 by Endsley and his wife, Eleanor, to be awarded to a part-time working student who is a resident of Indiana, based on financial need.

Endsley and Klineman hope their scholarships inspire a generation of attorneys committed to public service. They hope law school students and faculty remember the legacy of alumni who have made government work honorable. They have special empathy for students who, as they did, struggle to work full-time jobs during the day while they muddle through law school classes at night.

"We have to train new lawyers who will take care of the poor and middle class, not just those who need estate planning," Endsley says.

"The people whose estate planning consists of getting to the next paycheck," Klineman interjects.

In April, the law school thanked them for their generosity—for their leadership as alumni, gifts to the law school over the years, and the new scholarships—by naming Endsley and Klineman recipients of the Spirit of Philanthropy awards at IUPUI.

"They ran out of eligible candidates," Endsley jokes. They both laugh. ■

THE LOVEJOY AWARDS

The Lovejoy Awards were established in 2004 by Joby Jerrells, '03. They are awarded annually to the students submitting the best briefs in the third semester of legal writing as a component of moot court participation. Elijah Lovejoy was a publisher and avid abolitionist during the antebellum era who died defending his printing press. An angry mob murdered Lovejoy in 1837 on the frontier of the American west in Alton, Illinois. Many consider Lovejoy to be the first martyr to freedom of the press in the United States. Lovejoy was a contemporary of Abraham Lincoln, who later selected Lovejoy's younger brother John to serve as U.S. counsel to Peru. Another brother, Owen, served and died in the U.S. Congress during Lincoln's presidency. Upon hearing the news of Owen's death, Lincoln said: "Lovejoy was the only friend I had in Congress." The Lovejoy Award for best brief was established to honor this generation of brothers who dedicated their lives to a greater purpose and through the power of their words, writings, and advocacy changed a nation.

JUDITH ANSPACH presented “Moving from the Traditional to the Virtual Classroom” at the American Association of Law Libraries Annual Meeting in New Orleans on July 16. Her presentation focused on teaching advanced legal research as an online course.

Professor KAREN E. BRAVO presented her work on modern trafficking in humans and the trans-Atlantic slave trade at the American Association of Law Schools/American Society of International Law Joint Mid-Year Meeting, What is Wrong with the Way We Teach International Law?, in Vancouver, Canada on June 17-20; at the Second Annual Big Ten Aspiring Scholars Conference at Indiana University School of Law – Bloomington, on August 5-7; and the NEPOC (Northeast People of Color Legal Scholarship Conference) 2007 at The Southern New England School of Law, North Dartmouth, Massachusetts on September 14-15. Additionally, Professor Bravo was the moderator and a panelist for “‘Seeing Through Other Eyes’: Teaching and Experiencing Diversity in an Interdisciplinary Manner in the Higher Education Curriculum” at the Twelfth Annual LatCrit Conference held at the Florida International University, in Miami, Florida in October. The panel was organized by Professor Bravo, together with Professor Maria Pabon Lopez.

Professor Bravo discussed her innovative course, “Illicit International Markets,” as a moderator and panelist at the second annual Protection Project Symposium, Incorporating Trafficking in Persons into Human Rights Curricula in Universities in the United States and Abroad, held on November 27 at the Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies in Washington, D.C. Participants in the symposium included academics, policy makers, advocates and other practitioners representing a variety of disciplines and a number of countries.

Professor Bravo’s article “Smoke, Mirrors and the Joker in the Pack: On Transitioning to Democracy and the Rule of Law in Post-Soviet Armenia,” was published as lead article in the HOUSTON JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, 29 HOUS. J. INT’L L. 489 (2007). Her article “Exploring the Analogy between Modern Trafficking in Humans and the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade” appears in volume 25 of the BOSTON UNIVERSITY INTERNATIONAL LAW JOURNAL (2007).

In her capacity as a member of the Association of American Law Schools Planning Committee for the 2008 Workshop for New Law Teachers, One-Day Workshop for New Clinical Teachers, and Workshop on Retention of Minority Law School Teachers, in June Professor Bravo attended the 2007 Workshop for New Law Teachers, One-Day Workshop on Thriving and Surviving in the Academy: Steps for People of Color and Their Law Schools, and the planning meeting for the 2008 Workshops in Washington, D.C.

Professor Bravo has been selected from among a worldwide pool of applicants to make a New Voices panel presentation at the April 2008 102nd Annual Meeting of the American Society of International Law in Washington, D.C. Professor Bravo also has been selected by the AALS Section on International Human Rights to make a New Voices presentation at the January 2008 annual meeting of the association.

In July, KENNETH D. CHESTEK attended the Applied Legal Storytelling Conference in London, England, where he presented his paper “The Plot Thickens: The Appellate Brief as Story.” The premise of the article is that appellate briefs can be made more persuasive if the brief writer thinks consciously about the client’s story, using the techniques of the fiction writer: character, theme, conflict, plot, etc. The conference was co-sponsored by The Legal Writing Institute and the City University of London. It was held in historic Gray’s Inn, one of the four Inns of Court. Professor Chestek’s article will appear in LEGAL WRITING—THE JOURNAL OF THE LEGAL WRITING INSTITUTE. A peer-edited journal, its editors are all law professors and they select articles based on a blind review process.

Professor KENNETH CREWS has received a commission from the World Intellectual Property Organization, an agency of the United Nations based in Geneva, to prepare a study of copyright statutes from more than 180 countries addressing the issues of copying of works by or for libraries. Many countries have statutes permitting libraries to make copies of works for purposes such as research or preservation. The statutes vary widely in their scope and complexity, and they manifest the tension between owners of copyrights and the public’s interest in using those works. That tension underlies much of copyright law. The study already has received wide attention, and it has the potential of establishing a policy framework for the enactment or revision of such statutes around the world.

In recent months, Professor Crews has participated in conferences and has led workshops at DePaul University College of Law, at Carnegie Mellon University, and at other locations. He was a guest speaker on issues of fair use in copyright to launch a major research initiative at the American University College of Law in Washington, D.C. In October, Crews returned to Germany to teach a seminar as part of the LL.M. program offered at the Munich Intellectual Property Law Center. Professor Crews has been a member of the law faculty in Indianapolis since 1994, and with mixed feelings he will be making a major career move in January of 2008. He was recruited by Columbia University to establish a new office that will address copyright issues at Columbia and in national and international policy. Professor Crews will be moving to New York City, but he looks forward to continuing his work with many good colleagues in the Indianapolis area.

On September 8, JAMES D. DIMITRI, gave a presentation entitled “Preparing Persuasive Writing and Oral Advocacy Assignments” at the Southeast Legal Writing Conference at Nova Southeastern University’s Shepard Broad Law Center in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. This two-day conference was attended by legal writing professionals and academics from around the country.

She also presented “I Can’t to I Kant: The Sexual Harassment of Working Adolescents, Competing Theories, and Ethical Dilemmas,” for a panel entitled “Atypical Workers in a Different Key: Young, Old, Female and the Law of Work,” at the Law and Society Association 2007 Conference in Berlin, Germany on July 28. Professor Drobac was elected to serve as vice chair on the Board of Trustees for the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation.

GEORGE E. EDWARDS has accepted an invitation to become a member of the Titled Professors Committee of IUPUI. This Committee provides advice and recommendations for titled professor appointments. The term of service is generally expected to be three years. Professor Edwards is the Carl M. Gray Professor of Law, and is a member of Indiana University’s Alliance of Distinguished and Titled Professors.

For 20 years, JEFF GROVE has been traveling to China on behalf of the law school: in 1987 he created and inaugurated the law school’s first program abroad in Shanghai; most recently, in June, he hosted receptions in Beijing and Shanghai for Chinese alumni of the school’s Master of Laws (LL.M.) Program, begun under his leadership as Associate Dean for Graduate Studies in 2002. He also served as Resident Professor for the first half of the summer law program, which he established in 1998 at Renmin (People’s) University of China School of Law in Beijing, where he is designated Honorary Professor.

Professor Grove has been named Senior Associate at Indiana University’s new Research Center for Chinese Politics & Business (RCCPB), which focuses on issues that intersect China’s political system and the business world, promoting academic research and fostering discussion among the academic, policy, and business communities. Grove is particularly interested in the role of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) in determining the future of Rule of Law in China. In September he participated in the Center’s first Fall event—a luncheon at which Robert Kapp, former president of the US-China Business Council, was the featured speaker.

A member of the Indiana State Bar Association (ISBA) Federal Judiciary Committee, Professor Grove was a member of the planning group for the “Conference on Relations between Congress and the Federal Courts,” held in the Wynne Courtroom, Inlow Hall, on September 14, 2007. This conference brought together academic lawyers, legislators, and judges for presentations and discussions before an audience of 200 persons from the legal community and beyond. Grove moderated the legislative panel and, with Judge Ruggero J. Aldisert, for whom he clerked, and Hon. Dan Coats, an alumnus of the school, was instrumental in arranging for Justice Samuel Alito to deliver the Keynote Address.

Also in September, Representative Brian C. Bosma appointed Professor Grove to the four-member Indiana Lobby Registration Commission: “The commission plays a vital role in assuring public confidence in the government process, and Professor Grove will continue to ensure that lobbying in Indiana is transparent and closely regulated,” said Bosma.

Professor Grove, who has held administrative appointments as Academic Affairs Dean, Acting Dean, and Graduate Studies Dean for a third of his nearly 36 years as a member of the law faculty, will take Emeritus status at the end of the 2007 calendar year.

HENRY KARLSON gave a lecture on “Evidence: What’s Hot and What’s Not,” for an Indiana Public Defender Council conference in June. In September, he lectured on Evidence at the ICLEF Indiana Law Update program. In October, Professor Karlson presented a lecture on “The Right of Confrontation” for an online CLE program sponsored by the Indiana Public Defender Council.

ROB KATZ is researching the legal and ethical issues raised when nonprofit tissue banks compete for donated human tissue for use in transplantation. He presented a work-in-progress on this topic, entitled “When Tissue Banks Compete for Transplant Tissue, Who Wins?” at the Midwestern Law and Economics Association’s fall conference, held at the University of Minnesota Law School on October 13, and at the annual conference of ARNOVA (Association for Research on Nonprofit Organizations and Voluntary Action), held in Atlanta, Georgia, on November 15, 2007.

In October 2007, Professor Katz was cited in a major charity law case in New Jersey state court that pitted Princeton University against the heirs of donors of a gift currently valued at $800 million. The New Jersey court quoted extensively from Professor Katz’s article “Let Charitable Directors Direct: Why Trust Law Should Not Curb Board Discretion over a Charitable Corporation’s Mission and Unrestricted Assets”, to support its refusal to impose stricter trust law standards on the University’s use of the gift, opting instead (as Professor Katz argued) for the “more flexible and adaptable principles of corporate law.”

Professor Kinney Inducted as Section Fellow of ABA Section on Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice

On October 26th, the ABA Section on Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice inducted Professor Eleanor DeArman Kinney as a Section Fellow at its dinner celebrating the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. She has also been appointed as a Technical Consultant to the Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Medicare Hearing and Appeals on its project entitled: "Improving Internal and External Web-based Information for the Office of Medicare Hearings and Appeals," 2007. During his time overseas, Professor Klein is working on an article about how developments in the world of genetics might impact toxic tort litigation. Professor Lefstein Assumes Responsibility for National Projects Related to Legal Representation for the Indigent

Norman Lefstein, Professor and Dean Emeritus, has agreed to serve as a reporter for the National Right to Counsel Committee of which he is also a member. The committee has been organized by The Constitution Project and the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, both of Washington, D.C. The honorary co-chairs of the committee are Walter Mondale, former Vice President of the United States, and William Sessions, former director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

As a reporter, Professor Lefstein will be responsible, in association with a consulting firm, for preparing a national report about the state of defense services for the poor in criminal prosecutions and juvenile delinquency cases, as well as formulating recommendations for improvements. The importance of effective legal representation for the indigent has been heightened in recent years due to exonerations of innocent persons based upon DNA evidence. The report is expected to be released in the fall of 2008.

Professor Lefstein also has agreed, at the request of the American Bar Association (ABA) Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants, to prepare a comprehensive guidebook and recommendations to assist public defenders and other lawyers dealing with excessive caseloads in representing the indigent. The guidebook, which is part of a three-year project, is prompted by an ABA legal ethics opinion published in 2006, which made clear that all lawyers have a duty to avoid caseloads in which they are prevented from providing "competent" representation as required by rules of professional conduct. During the project's third year, when the guidebook is expected to be completed, a national conference will be held dealing with defender caseloads and related indigent defense issues.

Among Professor Lefstein's prior positions are service as director of the D.C. Public Defender Service in the 1970's and reporter for the second edition of ABA Standards Related to Providing Defense Services and The Defense Function. He also chaired the Task Force that oversaw the preparation of the ABA's current edition of these standards. During 1997-1998, Professor Lefstein served as chief consultant to the Subcommittee on Federal Death Penalty cases of the United States Judicial Conference and in this capacity directed preparation of a report dealing with the cost and quality of defense services in federal death penalty cases. More recently, in 2004, Professor Lefstein co-authored the ABA's 2004 report on indigent defense, "Gideon's Broken Promise: America's Continuing Quest for Equal Justice." Until July 2007, Professor Lefstein chaired the Indiana Public Defender Commission, a position that he held for 17 years. ■

Why I chose IU

When I decided to go to law school, I specifically chose to apply only to IU School of Law—Indianapolis. I needed to support myself while attending school, and IU afforded me with that opportunity. The environment for learning in Indianapolis is unsurpassed. Being in the center of state government opens innumerable opportunities to learn and flourish as a law student.

Favorite memories of IU

As an undergraduate in Bloomington, I loved the comfy leather chairs at the Indiana Memorial Union, Special K cookies, the people, the gorgeous campus, IU winning the NCAA basketball championship, Greek life, Nick's, Little 500, trike races, and all of my classes. In my graduate studies at the IU School of Law—Indianapolis, I have memories of late-night study sessions, study desks by the windows in the library, Dean Frandsen fighting our causes, Professor Jegen keeping us on the edge of our seats and entertaining us with Merry Minstrels dancers, the Bonfire, and Professor (Uncle Wally) Krieger.

Advice to students

Make the most of what will be the most memorable time of your life. This is a time for learning, exploring, and growing personally. Absorb everything that you can, meet as many people as possible, forge lifetime relationships, and take some classes in areas that afford you the opportunity to experience something new or different — but don't forget to strive to do the best you can. The number of applicants to IU graduate programs grows annually and is becoming more competitive. A strong grade-point average will help you stand out in the crowd.

Why the Alumni Association is important to me

As a Kelley School of Business graduate, I learned the power of networking. As an IU School of Law—Indianapolis graduate, I learned that networking is a key element to success. Each and every day hundreds of opportunities arise for involvement with a cause or a group. It is my belief, however, that in order to establish meaningful relationships, you need to focus your attention on organizations that you feel an attachment or connection with. The IU Alumni Association is my organization of choice. The IUAA has so much going on, in so many places around the world, that the opportunities are virtually limitless. The people have one thing in common — they love IU.
