Race for the Cure

April 21, 2007

The annual Raleigh E. Lingeman Otolaryngology Lectureship was established by Dr. Lingeman's friends, colleagues, past residents and family to honor his lifetime of giving and caring for his patients, residents and students, and to promote a spirit of life-long contact among graduates of the Indiana University Otolaryngology Residency Program.

This year's lectureship on November 3, 2006 featured guest speakers, Lanny Garth Close, M.D., Professor and Chair from Columbia University; David R. Nielsen, M.D., Executive Vice President and CEO American Academy of Otolaryngology—Head and Neck Surgery Foundation; Stacey L. Halum, M.D., Assistant Professor; and Su Wooi Teoh, M.D., M.S., 4th Year Resident.

Topics included a review of the history of head and neck surgery in America, the medical benefits of using autologous muscle stem cells to treat laryngeal denervation injuries, the importance of developing otolaryngology-specific quality initiatives and performance measures and a description of long term auditory adaptation of cochlear implant users to a modified periphery frequency map.

RESIDENCY PROGRAM GRANTED FULL ACCREDITATION

On April 19, 2006 our residency program had a site visit by a representative of the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education (ACGME). The Residency Review Committee (RRC) for Otolaryngology—Head and Neck Surgery recently completed its review of our residency program and have granted our program full accreditation for an additional five years. The approximate date of our next site visit will be August, 2011.

This five-year accreditation—which is the maximum possible duration of continued accreditation represents clear recognition of the quality of our department's residency program.

Many thanks to Becky Wiley, and Sarah Maxwell for their hard work preparing for the site visit. Thanks also to all faculty and residents who provided input and met with the site visitor earlier this year.
