“Thanksgiving for the Abundance ... of Exam Prep Resources”

The next time you're in the library, look at the November display. Tying in with a Thanksgiving theme, it's titled, "Thanksgiving for the Abundance...of Exam Prep Resources".

Along with a cornucopia of fruits, vegetables, and fall foliage, this display highlights the numerous exam preparation resources owned by the library. In addition to the print resources, we have also provided a handout that lists online resources. The individual books are available for check-out and we have duplicate copies of most of them. Check them out at the Circulation Desk. The other online sources in the display may be copied, but please return the originals to the display when you're done copying.

Best wishes for a safe and enjoyable Thanksgiving and good luck as you prepare for exams.

GOOGLE SCHOLAR AND OPEN WORLDCAT

Recently, the internet search engine Google introduced a new concept with Google Scholar <http://scholar.google.com>, aimed at allowing users to find scholarly information on the Web. Google Scholar attempts to include “peer-reviewed papers, theses, books, preprints, abstracts, and technical reports from academic publishers, professional societies, preprint repositories and universities, and scholarly articles available across the Web.”

From all these sources, Google Scholar displays several types of records:

- Web documents
- Article citation-only records
- Book citation-only records.

The Web documents are those records that either link to a Web page that describes the document or link directly to an online version of it. The citation-only records for articles and books are extracted from Web documents and do not link directly to information in electronic form.

For those items that are book-title citations, users have the option of clicking from these records in Google Scholar to a “Find in a Library” feature, which links them to catalogs of nearby OCLC WorldCat member libraries for service. The feature that OCLC offers through Google is called “Open WorldCat,” and the current record set now makes available over 65 percent of all WorldCat holdings to users of that search engine. (OCLC WorldCat is the largest online bibliographic database, and represents the holdings of more than 53,000 libraries in 96 countries.) More records are being “harvested” by Google, and when completed, this will make all of the holdings of Open WorldCat available to researchers.

A similar Internet toolbar in Yahoo! Search enables researchers to use Yahoo! Search to explore both the Web and abbreviated records from Open WorldCat.
