School Mission

The IU School of Physical Education and Tourism Management capitalizes on its rich history and unique location in downtown Indianapolis to prepare future leaders in kinesiology and tourism by translating theory into practice.

The school's distinct culture and unique combination of disciplines foster innovative research, learning opportunities and civic engagement that enhance quality of life and economic development of local, national and global communities.

The vision for the School of Physical Education and Tourism Management is to be an emerging leader in kinesiology and tourism where talented students, faculty and staff thrive.

Department Overview

The Department of Kinesiology grants the Bachelor of Science in Kinesiology degree. Students may select from four tracks: exercise science including pre-physical therapy, pre-medicine and pre-occupational therapy options; K-12 physical education and health teacher education; fitness studies; and sport management. Students also may choose a variety of minors, endorsements, concentrations, and certificates.

A four-year degree, tourism, conventions, and event management emphasizes tourism research and meeting, special events, and sport event planning to prepare graduates for management positions in a variety of profit and nonprofit tourism organizations. Many certificate programs are also available to students and industry professionals.

The Department of Military Science also resides in the School of Physical Education and Tourism Management.
