Dean's report a great start to new academic year

Highlights from Herron School of Art and Design's 2010-2011 academic year illustrate Herron's value to the community ... and the community's value to Herron. Herron continues to thrive, as it has for 109 years, because its people make it relevant not only to current students, but to the larger world. As Herron looks forward to another great year, Dean Valerie Eickmeier shares a record of where we've been:

Grade reviews IMA work for Surface Design Journal

Community Learning Program Coordinator Susan Grade reported that her review of Ball-Nogues Studio's Gravity's Loom ran in the summer 2011 issue of Surface Design Journal, a quarterly publication which has covered the world of textiles since 1976. The work was installed in the Efromyson Pavillion at the Indianapolis Museum of Art from September 3, 2010 through March 6, 2011. In the review, Grade opined: "If the Pavilion could drape itself in a cloak, this would be it—a garment of precisely crafted geometry that morphed into an interactive display of painterly wonder."

BALL-NOGUES STUDIO

VCD students relax to release creativity with Urban Golf

It's not all fun and games. See how a few Visual Communication Design students blow off some steam, keep their perspective and stay creative all at the same time by playing urban golf. By the way, this little video is the first captured in high definition from start to finish. It's our aim to produce all projects going forward in HD.
