

ACCOUNTABILITY AND ARTICHOKE

A prediction. . .for the year ahead: the word "accountability" will be replaced or take on new meanings, for a number of reasons: first of all, it has tended to mean, in many instances, accountability to state coordinating boards, boards of regents, and legislators -- the assumption being that these bodies are truly representative of the public will. Second, as the issue of tax-supported private education becomes more crucial (which it is bound to, as the financial situation of private colleges becomes more critical), the question will grow to include the varying roles of private and public education. It will be seen that public institutions are, and to some degree should be, less free to determine their own direction than private institutions. Students are free to support or to refuse to support a private institution; there is no such freedom on the taxpayer's part, a fact which changes the responsibility of the public university. Finally, "accountability" will become a firmer concept at the faculty level, now that collective bargaining is a more-or-less universally accepted tool. Professional and academic standards will take on a definition they currently lack in most universities; or at least we will see the beginning of that struggle. . .Scottsdale Community College students have voted overwhelmingly to adopt the artichoke as their college mascot. ## IT'S YOUR MOVE

A major symposium on how wives cope -- or don't cope -- with moving will be held by IUPUI Monday, (June 12) at Stouffer's Indianapolis Inn.

The symposium, titled "The Effects of Mobility on the Wife," is sponsored by Allied Van Lines to bring together a national panel of psychologists and sociologists for discussions of their research. Topics covered will include: How mothers' anxieties and the impact of a long-distance move affect their children and families, how women react when they are forced to move through circumstances beyond their control and how they react when they plan to move but cannot, how women affect the patterns of moving by families, how wives and mothers adapt to moving, family problems caused by moving, the factors involved in families' decisions about where to move.

Participants will come from the University of Louisville, University of California, Indiana Central College, Columbia University, San Francisco's Letterman General Hospital and the Canadian Ministry of State for Urban Affairs.

The program co-ordinator is Dr. James L. Hawkins, IUPUI assistant professor of sociology.

SPEAKING OF MOVING. . .

One of the News Bureau's most prized possessions (next to the folding machine) is leaving his jammed cubicle for the mountains and lakes of New York State this month.

Joe Lehman, who has been covering the Schools of Medicine and Dentistry and all things IUPUI-ish for the last 10 years, has accepted the position of director of public relations at Hartwick College, a liberal arts college with about 1,600 students at Oneonta, New York. His wife, Katherine, also will be departing from her position as reference librarian at the School of Dentistry.

The Lehmans will be sorely missed but their friends and colleagues wish them much success and happiness at Hartwick.

DEFENSE DE FUMER -- NIX DAS SMOKEN WHEN VERBOTEN

This is a reminder that the "No Smoking" signs scattered throughout the IUPUI campus really mean what they say. Chancellor Hine has received several communications -- from the Indianapolis Fire Department, students, faculty, staff, even deans -- stressing the importance of enforcing the no-smoking regulations in IUPUI classrooms and other designated areas. Please comply.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICES

When foreign students need help, or when faculty or staff members plan to travel abroad, counsel and expertise are available on campus at the IUPUI Division of International Affairs. Those who plan foreign travel can get useful information, including immunization and other health advice.

The division provides aid to all foreign nationals -- students, faculty, or staff-- before and during their stay here. These services include aid in meeting Federal regulations, shipping of personal effects, and finding housing.

The division is on the mezzanine of the Union Building, Ext. 7294. The director is Dr. Edwin W. Brown, and Mrs. Ann Pollard is administrative assistant. In conjunction with I.U.'s International Affairs Center, the division coordinates educational and research programs in a number of other countries.

A LITTLE TRAVELING MONEY. . .

The IUPUI Credit Union is now selling American Express travelers' checks at the same rate -- $101 for $100 of travelers' checks -- as banks and similar institutions. The Credit Union is also selling money orders with a 25 cent charge for amounts up to $200. Both services are available at the Credit Union offices in the Allied Health building and at General Hospital.

BONDED?

By now, if the distribution system worked, each staff and faculty member has an invitation from Chancellor Hine to take part in the Payroll Savings Plan for purchase of U.S. Savings Bonds. There are special ways of purchasing bonds, including building a college fund for your children and preparing for retirement by planning to exchange E Bonds for H Bonds. Both of these methods offer tax advantages. For more information, contact the Office of the Chancellor, Ext. 8710.

BLUE CROSS-BLUE SHIELD ANNUAL REPORT

Blue Cross-Blue Shield has made its annual report on the Indiana University employee group experience for the past year. The report revealed that the claims paid for I.U. employees during the year increased 18.5 per cent, or $440,000, over the previous year. The size of our group membership increased only 6.7 per cent.

In spite of the increase in group membership over the previous year, there was no significant increase in number of hospital admissions from our group. However, those admitted average a one-day longer stay in hospital. Also, the average daily cost of the hospital care was up 7 per cent. Outpatient care and doctor-office care, combined, went up 10 per cent for the year.

As a result of this experience, Blue Cross-Blue Shield officials have proposed an increase in our group premiums starting 7/1/72, as follows:

Family Coverage	$3.14 per month
Single Coverage	1.30 per month
Medicare Supplement	.76 per month

A 50/50 sharing of this increase between employees and university has been planned for next year's budget.
