The Carnegie Commission on Higher Education has asked the Federal Government to spend up to $300,000,000 a year to promote the development of the "new technology"--instruction via electronic media. The report called the possibilities opened up by cable television, videotape cassettes, and computers "the first great technological revolution in five centuries," and compared it to the shift of education from home to school, the use of writing as an instructional device, and the invention of movable type. Money is necessary: as it is the new technology is not developing in any coordinated way, and the equipment it requires is expensive. Commission chairman Clark Kerr denies that electronic media will--or can--replace the teacher; instead it will free teachers for more contact with individual students. . . The Columbia University Club has voted to allow women full membership; now women graduates of Columbia may join. Earlier this spring the Harvard Club voted not to extend membership to women. . . Scripps College students show a preference for vegetarian meals this year, according to food service director Alfred Izzolo. Though there aren't many complete vegetarians on campus, there have been numerous requests for more meatless meals, and the food service is working on a meatless chow mein. . . Michael Shields, an ex-convict studying at Pennsylvania State University, as part of a special program for parolees, was elected president of the student government last month. Shields was then accused of several parole violations, but the Pennsylvania state parole board has dropped the charges and ordered Shields released from jail. The board was impressed with his "tremendous leadership qualities". . . Having completed the required course of studies at Hebrew Union College, Sally Priesand has been ordained the first woman rabbi. College President Alfred Gottschalk called it "one of the true tests of Reform Judaism, the fact that every woman is equal with men in the community of the Lord." Ms. Priesand will serve as assistant rabbi at Stephen M. Wise Free Synagogue in New York City. (From University Today Newsletter)

POLICE TAKING COURSE AT MEDICAL CENTER

About 240 police officers from throughout the state, the largest number ever enrolled, are in medical school this month to learn the scientific tests that help convict drunk drivers.

When they complete the special course in Chemical Tests for Intoxication at the Indiana University School of Medicine, they will be eligible for certification to use the Breathalyzer, a fast and accurate device for measuring the amount of alcohol in the driver's blood, in the campaign to get drunk drivers off Indiana's streets and highways.

This special school for city, county, and state officers, sponsored by the State Department of Toxicology and the School of Medicine, is directed by Dr. Robert Forney, director of the department.

The week-long course covers instruction in the metric system, the physiology of alcohol, the effects of various levels of body alcohol and legal aspects in the use of breath to determine blood alcohol. Most of the week is spent learning how to use the Breathalyzer (invented by Professor Robert F. Borkenstein, chairman of the department of police administration, IUB).

More than 1,000 Hoosier law enforcement officials have completed the school and have been legally certified to administer the test for drunken driving and public intoxication.

TRAVELLERS

Professor Dixie Koldjeski, chairman of the department of psychiatric-mental health nursing, was in Athens, Greece, last month to speak at the Hellenic Red Cross School of Nursing. She talked about "Contemporary Practices and Trends in Psychiatric-Mental Health Nursing."

Dr. M.H. Aprison, chief of the section of neurobiology and professor of biochemistry, was invited to Vanderbilt University this month to participate in the fourth workshop for senior graduate students sponsored by the American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics. He lectured on neurochemical aspects of inhibition in the central nervous system.

Miss Janet Gillon, clinical nursing specialist in infant cardiology, Riley Nursing Service, went to the University of Pittsburgh this month for the Biennial Maternal-Child Nursing Conference. She presented a paper called "Family Stresses When One Child Has Heart Disease -- A Mother's Viewpoint."

Warren G. French, chairman and professor of English, was in Chicago recently for a meeting of the Panel on Film Study of the Committee on Institutional Co-operation (CIC). It was announced that the CIC film library will be housed at I.U.-Bloomington. The library eventually plans to make feature films available to use with any appropriate courses at the CIC schools (Big Ten schools plus the University of Chicago).
Interested persons should ask Professor French about details.

Dr. Lawrence M. Roth, associate professor of pathology, is planning ahead for a trip to New Orleans in November. He has been invited to participate in the Second Annual George Papanicolaou Memorial Seminar in Gynecologic Pathology. The seminar is presented in conjunction with the 66th Annual Meeting of the Southern Medical Association and will consist of presentations and discussions of 15 cases submitted by participants from various medical centers.

Dr. J.M. Kapoor of the Graduate School of Social Service recently attended a seminar on "The Use of Multimedia in Social Work Education" at Kalamazoo, Michigan. The seminar was organized by the Council on Social Work Education and conducted by the School of Social Work at Western Michigan University.

Dr. Diane Brashear, assistant professor of social service, went to Purdue-West Lafayette this month to talk about "Adjustment: Its Meaning to Women." The occasion was the annual Homemakers' Conference.

Joseph E. Kuczkowski, department of mathematics, is attending a three-week course in category theory at Colgate University in Hamilton, New York.

NEWS 'N' NOTES FROM HERE 'N' THERE

Tune In (Part II) -- Dr. Joseph F. Fitzgerald, assistant professor of pediatrics, did not appear on the Mike Douglas Show last Thursday. He will, however, appear on the talk show July 6 to talk about liver disease and the prospects for successful liver transplants. Really.

LIBRARY NEWS

MEDLINE (MEDLARS On-Line) is an on-line bibliographic facility for libraries of medical schools, hospitals, and research institutions. It allows almost instantaneous searching of the medical literature including 400,000 citations from more than 1,000 journals indexed for MEDLARS since January 1969.

The School of Medicine Library is the only one in Indiana to have been accepted as one of the participants in the network. The free service is available to any library patron in the state. Miss Ann Van Camp, assistant reference librarian, has had a three-week training course at the National Library of Medicine.
