~~SOCIAL SERVICE TO OFFER UNDERGRAD DEGREE PROGRAM~~

Dean Richard G. Lawrence of the School of Social Service has announced the establishment of a bachelor of social work degree program, the first such degree offered at IUPUI. The school has offered a master of social work degree and some undergraduate social work courses.

"The program will train students who want to go into professional social service work," said Cyrus S. Behroozi, associate professor and co-ordinator of undergraduate development. The school is a member of the Council on Social Work Education, the national accrediting body.

"We are very happy that we will begin this new degree program in August," Dean Lawrence said. "We have been planning it for a long time and are excited about getting started. We feel that this bachelor of social work program will give the students good professional preparation for various fields of social service work.

"We are happy, too, to have the program in Indianapolis," he added. "Besides the field work which will be done here, there will also be a great deal of field work throughout the state. It is our hope that the program will serve the needs of the state in all the fields of social service and social work. Students may be able to complete some of the requirements on other Indiana University campuses."

TO THE EDITOR. . .

In the "Education Notes" of the June 17 issue of the Green Sheet you mentioned that the NLRB has ruled that academic department heads are not supervisors and should be included in collective bargaining units. Your statement is not entirely accurate. The article in the Chronicle of Higher Education to which you referred stated that the NLRB ruled that generally department heads are not supervisors, but that there have been instances, and this is important to IUPUI, in which department heads are considered supervisors, even by the NLRB definition.

More specifically, since department chairmen at IUPUI often have the power to hire and discharge members of the part-time faculty, this fact would place them in the ranks of supervisors. Both mathematics and English have, for example, used more part-time faculty than full-time faculty; and from previous court rulings it is apparent that this in itself suffices to make the chairmen of these departments supervisors by the NLRB definition. It is my strong opinion that department chairmen should not be included in collective bargaining units, and it would appear that due to the large number of part-time faculty they control, many IUPUI department heads fit the legal criteria for being classified as supervisors. -- Michael C. Gemignani, Mathematics.
