Iowa caucus not vital

by Ndunge K. Balakushna
"The Iowa results are not that vital in determining who will win the presidency," said Patrick J. McGeever, professor of political science, at last week's roundtable discussion presented by the Student Political Science Association (POLSA). Speaking before an audience of some 30 students, the 10-member panel of guests and faculty agreed that a victory in the Iowa caucus is not a strong indication of who will win the nomination because a mass view was not represented.

McGeever opened the discussion on "What (If Anything) Did We Learn From Iowa?" by saying that while the caucus was not really important, there were some things to be learned from it.

"First, it is important to have a local network [of political support] set up early if the candidate expects to win there, and he must begin his campaign for that state early. As it was, Kennedy campaigned five months behind Carter, thus he was not victorious.

"Second, there isn't another caucus scheduled for five weeks. This time span allows people to think about the results and how their candidate fared in the convention. Also, the victor in Iowa usually gets more financial support from his backers and more campaign volunteers."

McGeever concluded that "the media is shaping the electorate in American politics, and Iowa is the first round of a very long political battle."

This talk marks the first in a series of roundtable discussions with department faculty and guests.

Lady Metros triumph twice

by Brian Clouse

IUPUI's women cagers made it two triumphs in a row during the week, with wins at Indiana Central Wednesday night, and at home against Indiana State Thursday. The two wins lifted the Metro's record to 5-4, on their way to a winning season.

A free-throw shooting blitz keyed coach Kathy Tucker's ladies to a 66-48 triumph over Indiana Central's Whippetts at Nicoson Hall. The Metros' last 15 points of the game were all free-throws, with a game total 24 of 29, for an impressive 83 percent.

All-American center Tina Masengale lead all scorers with 20 points, and sparkled defensively, pulling down 13 rebounds, blocking three shots, and making four steals. Talented leftie Barb Spears was also in double figures, hitting a perfect eight for eight at the charity stripe, and adding three buckets for 14 points. Kathy Gaddie hailed down nine rebounds, and pilfered two Indiana Central passes in the victory.

The Sycamores of Indiana State took it down to the final seconds, but the IUPUIers pulled out a barn-burner, defeating the visitors 68-64 at Westlane.

Chyrell Saunders and Masengale were hampered early in the first half, each getting tagged with three fouls in the first 20 minutes. IUPUI jumped to a quick 8-2 lead in the early going, but could only manage a tie at 34 after 20 minutes.

The women came roaring out in the second half, outscoring ISU 6-0 in the first two minutes of play. Turnovers and so-so shooting by IUPUI, however, helped ISU gain a 44-43 lead with 11:35 to go. The lead changed hands from there five different times in the second half, with ISU tying it up for the last time at 68.

Barb Spears then was tacked with a foul, sending ISU to the line. The Sycamores canned the first, but missed the bonus, moving ahead by one. That was the last time the women from Terre Haute saw the lead, as the Metros' Masengale layed in two on a fastbreak. Karen Secor made some giant plays to keep IUPUI in the game, dishing out eight assists to Masengale, Spears, and Gaddie.

The Sycamores fouled to stay alive, but converted foul shots and rebounds preserved the victory for IUPUI.

The Metros put three women in double figures, with top scoring honors going to Spears with 20 points. Masengale chipped in 16 and Gaddie added 12. Merri Taylor of IUPUI tossed in a clutch free-throw, and Marty Kalb hit three key buckets to ice the victory.

After traveling to Evansville Saturday, the women Metros will meet Marian at home tonight (Jan. 28) at 2 p.m.

US to pay Russ embargo cost

IU-BLOOMINGTON NEWS BUREAU

The cost to the American people and the ultimate decline of the dollar on the world market are too high a price to pay for the gain achieved by the embargo on wheat to Russia, according to Michele Fratianni, professor of business economics and public policy at the School of Business. He served as an economic adviser to the Common Market for three years.

Farmers will initially bear the brunt of the embargo, said Fratianni, but because they have a powerful lobby in Washington, they will undoubtedly get a support program for the grain from Congress.

Ultimately all citizens of the United States will share the cost of the embargo, he said. "I have seen estimates that the embargo package will cost $18 per person before this is over."

In spite of the high cost, the professor offered little hope that the embargo will succeed. "History shows that embargoes have seldom been effective," he said, citing the cases of Rhodesia and South Africa.

"Embargoes require the cooperation of all parties concerned. This applies to the embargo on Iran as well. Embargoes operate according to the 'oligopoly theory' (control by a few), which suggests there is always the profit incentive on the part of one of the members to skip around. In this case it could be Argentina, or Canada," said Fratianni.

"There is always an incentive not to obey the so-called rules of the game. Nations are not individuals and do not run according to Carter's principles of morality. Nations have interests and not morals, a lesson the Americans have to learn, the sooner the better," he said.

Another reason the embargo will not work, according to Fratianni, is the economic realities of the world market.

The Russians can bid up the world price and deliveries will

Seasoned debaters prepare

IUPUI's Debate Squad heads into this semester's competition with a winning record of impressive victories scored in the fall semester, though depleted numbers threaten to curtail the upcoming schedule of what Coach David Burns called "the best debate squad in the seven-year program."

Last semester's eight-person team participated in six tournaments, walking away with two first place awards, eight team awards, and ten speaker awards. No member had a losing record. The team's overall record of 69-44 included 16 rounds of novice, 32 rounds of junior varsity, and 21 rounds of varsity debating.

The novice debaters finished with a combined record of 37 wins and 13 losses, an outstanding showing. Competitors in this class were Vic Beard (4 awards), Mike Bowman (6 awards), Cheryl Vandiver-Pearcy (7 awards), and Lori Wolner (5 awards).

Junior varsity debaters Dianne Toney and Mike Winger won 12 and lost 8 matches as partners. Toney also earned a trophy in a varsity contest, while Winger earned an additional trophy paired with novice Vandiver-Pearcy.

Paul Britner and Rick Schreiber, the squad's varsity debaters, completed their tough semester's competition with a 5-7 record. Schreiber received the top speaker award and a trophy in the Notre Dame Varsity Tourney, the most outstanding success a team member has achieved in such competition. Britner won a third place speaker award and served as chairman of the student debate organization, University Forum.

The debaters plan two or three debates on campus this spring, and Dr. Burns urges all students looking for a "useful and challenging activity" to consider the debate class as they plan their fall schedule. To debate the details, contact him in Cavanaugh Hall Room 502-A, 264-7389.

Metros lose to Hope, 86-75

by Ann Miller

"We're like a car that runs on five pistons—only we're running on only two," observed Metro Coach Mel Garland, upset with the lackluster performance of his squad in their 86-75 drubbing at the hands of Hope College last Tuesday. Especially during the first half, it seemed as though some of the team decided to take an early spring vacation.

Clearly, it was a game the IUPUIers could have won if they had wanted to—if they had chosen to apply themselves. Hope, pushing their record to 7-5, certainly didn't play all that well.

The Flying Dutchmen were outrebounded 51-41, and were just as seriously afflicted with "erroritis" as were the Metros (21 turnovers to the Metros' 22). Yet, they were able to rack up the win on their deft aim and balanced scoring attack.

The Michigan club shot 54.4 percent on 30 of 55 field goals, while converting 26 of 35 free throws. And, though no one on the squad played more than 28 minutes, seven Dutchmen cracked double figures.

Despite the visitors' solid shooting stats, the outcome of the game could well have been different had the Metros shown a bit more concentration, especially on offense. IUPUI has been struggling with their shooting lately, with their accuracy from the floor hovering around 35-40 percent through most of this losing skein.

The Hope game was no exception. The Metros got off 15 more field goal tries than their opponents, yet none of the 15 ever saw net. Only 29 of 70 Metro shots connected, just over 41 percent. At the foul line their tack was a lowly 17 of 29.

Nevertheless, spirited individual performances were turned in by Mike Herr and Kevin Brauna. Herr was the mainstay offensively and defensively for the red-and-gold, pouring in 19 points and wrestling down 12 caroms.

Though he saw only 20 minutes of action, Brauna did a yeoman's job, ending up with 16 points and five rebounds. The freshman was instrumental during the Metros' late-game surge, pulling off a strong inside game, two critical steals, and all eight of his free throws.

Reserve Dale Wolfe topped the Hope attack with 13. Tom Vanderstel and Scott Benson netted 12 each while John Vanderguchte had 11. Rick Reese, Matt Neil, and Loren Schrotenboer all tallied 10 for the Flying Dutchmen.

Aiding the Metro cause along with Herr and Brauna were Ron Angevine with 12 and Kim King with 10.

The Metros travel to Western Illinois on Thursday, Jan. 31, for this season's last road game. On Tuesday, Feb. 5, they return home to meet Central State (Ohio).

Driving drunk

It seems as though when we head home after layout in the wee hours of the a.m., we always come upon the "rush hour" traffic leading from the local watering holes. Always makes for an exciting trip home, dodging these "party animals" who like to make a game of seeing how drunk or stoned they can get and still (somehow) make it home.

"Actually," these types will swear on a stack of bottle caps, "I drive much better after I've had a few." Sure they do...once they figure out which lane they want and what the little numbers on the dashboard are trying to tell them.

What's really frightening is listening to a couple of these tipplers brag about how they "have no idea how they got home last night." Too bad we can't give them an instant replay of their weaving, screeching journey behind the wheel. It might frighten them into a nice, safe cab for a change.

Regardless of the jokes and bragging, drunk driving is not cute, funny, or excusable. It is putting an incompetent person behind the wheel of a lethal weapon, and it is dangerous not only to the idiot who's driving, but to the potential innocent victim as well.

Recognizing this fact, the Indiana House last week passed a bill increasing from two to five years the penalty for drunken driving if the accident results in the death of another person. Reckless homicide with a motor vehicle also increased from a two- to a five-year sentence.

Included in the bill is a provision for raising the Class D misdemeanor of "causing bodily injury while driving under the influence of alcoholic beverages or drugs" to a Class D felony punishable by up to two years in prison.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Darrell Felling of Terre Haute, is to be commended for his much-needed attention to the problem of the drunken driver. We hope that the 92-5 support his measure received in the House will be echoed when it reaches the floor of the Senate. If so, we shall toast the responsible actions of our state legislators—then we'll get somebody to drive us home.

Reader defends Carter

To The Editor:

Peace is riding a very unstable tightrope. As Americans, we are fighting a struggle within ourselves between anger and fear. We have become uncertain of our future as well as our existence as a free nation.

Since early November, President Carter has spent every waking moment in a desperate game of chess with an enemy that has multiplied itself two-fold.

As the Soviet Union and Iran continue to play their ridiculous games, President Carter has been forced to be the scapegoat of a confused United States, has been punctured by the political needles of congressmen and presidential candidates and by almost every American with any hint of knowledge of foreign policy. He plays the role of the aggressor as well as a referee in a very dangerous game of world supremacy.

One fact remains clear. President Carter has managed up to now to keep the United States out of a military confrontation. No doubt the idea has crossed his mind at one point, but he continues to keep his base covered, not allowing the U.S. to become vulnerable. This must be commended in a man who is not only fighting for peace but is also fighting to keep his position as commander-in-chief.

Wednesday night, President Carter gave his State of the Union address. It seemed obvious as he spoke that he was more concerned about the state of events in the Middle East than in his own existence as president. He cares about us, not just himself, a trait not yet learned by the candidates after his job.

Now that he wants to reinstate the Selective Service, President Carter may lose a few points. That decision was met with great disagreement among the younger population of the country. His popularity may drop again even sharper than before.

In the course of events since November, President Carter has lost some of the admiration of the country. He has lost some trust from others. He has lost a great deal of campaign time. He may have lost the nomination for his decision to bring back the draft.

But he has managed all of this with a strong will and an admirable amount of determination. He has not cracked under the pressure of running his own government, unlike a president we remember from six years ago.

Now that's a winner.

Medicine easy in wild

Wilderness Medicine
William W. Forgey, M.D.
(Indiana Camp Supply Books, 1979; $5.95)

by William A. Barton

If the problems of first aid in the great outdoors have ever stymied you in the past, rejoice! Forgey's Wilderness Medicine will guide you out of the wilderness of medicinal ignorance when more than a hop, skip or jump away from civilization.

Forgey's "wilderness" medicines are real, honest-to-Eli Lilly remedies—treatments anyone can apply when disaster strikes out-of-doors and the nearest doctor is more than a phone call away. Forgey is a M.D. and he knows his profession. More importantly, he knows how to apply it to the type of outdoor emergency the average camper might encounter on the trail.

Forgey starts his book off with the valid advice that anyone planning on "roughing it"—whether backpacking, camping, climbing or canoeing—should always undergo a pre-trip physical examination. Such action could prevent any necessity for emergency treatment of some of the afflictions he describes in the manual. One should also become familiar with some of the basic lifesaving techniques such as a course in Cardio-pulmonary Resuscitation (CPR) and general methods for treating shock.

Forgey advises having at least one person in your group be designated as "group medic." He should be well versed in recognizing and treating such ailments as frostbite, blisters and cuts, animal bites, plant poisoning, and broken limbs. If you're soloing, that person should be you.

After this introduction, Forgey describes two separate medical kits for wilderness use: the prescription wilderness expedition medical kit and the non-prescription wilderness expedition medical kit. He further divides each kit in a basic and an augmentation kit. Each item, whether medicine or a surgical instrument, is listed for both kits with an explanation of what it is useful for and how it should be utilized. Forgey makes the important point that the outdoorsman should use one kit or the other, but not to mix items from the two.

Having given us the tools with which to work, the rest of the book educates us on the various health hazards that may be encountered in the wilds. The list is quite comprehensive. Forgey explains how to overcome everything from abdominal pains to Yellow Fever. The book is an outdoor hypochondriac's dream!

Forgey even gives the emergency treatments for a number of disease that aren't associated with the outdoors including VD, hernias, and tooth aches.

For each ailment, Forgey not only lists the symptoms and the treatment, he also pinpoints the cause and how to prevent it in the first place. Some treatments are surprisingly simple. For example, the best way to remove an imbedded fishhook is to first push it all the way through the skin, so that the barb is exposed. It can then be cut off and the hook easily pulled back through, minimizing the pain.

Other afflictions, such as hypothermia (a lowering of the body core temperature), can lead to death and calls for much more serious measures if the victim is to survive until professional help can be reached or summoned. A knowledge of some of the techniques explained here could mean the difference between life and death.

The sections on the various ailments are arranged rather haphazardly within the body of the book—a situation that could have disastrous results in an emergency situation. This odd oversight is corrected by a very comprehensive index, somewhat alleviating this flaw.

Otherwise, Forgey's manual is a striking example of clarity, comprehensible even to the non-medically inclined. Appendices such as an immunization schedule and a Centigrade-Fahrenheit conversion scale add to its usefulness. The two medical kits have also been printed on water-proof paper in case the book falls out of your back pocket while shooting the rapids.

All in all, if the great outdoors is your favorite domain, Forgey's Wilderness Medicine deserves a place in your backpack—unless reckless living or the old make-shift method is more your style.

Metheny suits jazz tastes

American Garage
Pat Metheny Group
(ECM-1-1155)

by Susan J. Ferrer

The basic ingredients of jazz are intense personal emotion and improvisation backdropped by a constant, driving rhythm. With American Garage, the Pat Metheny Group has concocted a mixture to suit the tastes of jazz connoisseurs everywhere.

On six-and 12-string guitars, the young Metheny handles typical jazz runs like a seasoned musician, and Lyle Mays on keyboards plays over a constant bass and drum rhythm with distinctive energy.

The amount of improvisation on a studio album is difficult to determine, but, given the average length of the cuts, improv—jazz's trademark—is very likely.

"(Cross the) Heartland," the album's first track, is quickly paced, evoking the feeling of moving along a country road at a speedy clip. With its medium tempo, "Airstream" is easy listening, as it shows off Metheny's talent for blues. The song's internal variation and balanced blend make it the best composition on the record.

The last cut on the first side, "The Search," makes full use of the guitars and keyboards. Slow melodic lines are nicely countered with timpani underscoring.

"American Garage," the title composition, begins the flipside in rockin' fashion. And "The Epic" finishes the album with a variety of tempos—mellow blues to syncopating rag. Because of its length—13 minutes—it is an obvious vehicle for improvisation. Each musician of the quartet shows off his particular talents.

Lee's Summit's native son, Pat Metheny, has produced and scored an excellent collection of jazz/rock. The group's youthful approach is refreshing.

Forbert savior of folk/rock

Jackrabbit Slim
(Nemperor JZ-36191)
Alive On Arrival
(Nemperor JZ-35538)
Steve Forbert

by Kevin Strunk

Twenty-four-year-old Steve Forbert may very well be the man who saves us all from drowning in a sea of disco, punk, and trash rock'n'roll with a welcome return to the clean sound of American folk-rock. With the release of two albums, Alive On Arrival and Jackrabbit Slim, Forbert has proven himself—combining a raspy voice, good acoustic guitar and excellent harmonica playing with outstanding lyrics.

Steve Forbert is a product of the deep south and his music blends classic folk themes with a definite touch of good-time southern jazz, black blues, and '60s and early '70s rock. The influences of such artists as Bob Dylan and Neil Young are evident throughout both albums.

On Alive On Arrival, his 1978 debut album, Forbert shows us a raw but talented youth. The entire album is built around his guitar and harmonica work with some able studio musicians filling in the instrumental gaps. Most of the songs rejoice in being young and on the brink of life, with a little experience in life tossed in. Love-sickness, home-sickness, rejection and hope all come out on the album.

"What Kinda Guy" is an upbeat blues number which sums up his presence in New York: What am I doing here? Side two's "Grand Central Station, March 18, 1977" will no doubt become a folk classic; it has all the qualities needed—introspection, lament, expression of self-esteem. In "Tonight I Feel So Far Away From Home," by far the best tune on the album, he shows us how it feels to be away from home in a strange place, and New York City is about as strange a place as any.

Jackrabbit Slim, released in the fall of 1979, is by far the better album. Recorded in Nashville with top-flight sidemen, the album is better-produced and the tunes are richer and fuller.

Side one starts off with "Romeo's Tune," a melodic piano piece which has been doing quite well as a single, receiving both AM and FM radio playtime. The rest of the side is more mellow, easy-listening music.

"Make It All So Real," the lead track on the second side, is about something we've all been through: seeing someone you love being stolen away. This time it's from the eyes of a performer as he plays, watching his lady walk out the door with a stranger. This song is definitely from the heart.

"Sadly Sorta Like A Soap Opera" has harmonica interludes and really shows off Forbert's abilities as an arranger.

Finally, we are transported to Mississippi through "January 23-30, 1978" in which Forbert recounts a visit home. He does the things and remembers the events of his youth—getting drunk with the guys, checking out old girlfriends. You get the feeling that by coming home, he has finally left to find another. We all grow up and leave to establish our own existence; Forbert has established his.

Forbert will show off his talents to Indiana when he appears at Ball State Feb. 2.

still be made. They can buy through third parties. For example, the grain could be purchased on the world market by Poland, and at the last minute the ship could be diverted to a Russian port," said the professor, who spends each summer in Europe as a visiting professor at the University of Leuven, Belgium and as adviser to the Central Bank of Italy.

"The possibilities for a black market are infinite," he said.

Finally, even if everyone did cooperate, an embargo of grain would take at least a year and a half to be effective, according to Fratianni. Russia has plenty of grain to feed its people, he said. American grain is used for livestock feed, and since the production cycle of livestock is 18 months, the Russians will not feel any pinch soon enough to have much effect on their latest move in Afghanistan.

Fratianni also predicted a potential rise in inflation and further depression of the value of the dollar in foreign exchange markets as likely long-range effects of the embargo. "The US relies very heavily on agricultural exports which offset the larger import bill of oil. Without exports, our balance of payments will deteriorate, the deficit will have to be financed with dollars, the supply of dollars will rise, and the dollar will fall even more.

"The embargo appears to be an emotional reaction to a crisis that we don't quite know how to handle, not the calculated response of one almighty nation to the attack of another almighty nation," said Fratianni.
