Maennerchor Era Luncheon

Evening of Celebration | 2014 Commencement | Dean's Report

Message from the Dean

As some of you may know, the ABA recently enacted new standards related to legal education. One of those standards requires students to engage in experiential learning before graduation. For our school, that will be a natural, as we have long provided students with rich opportunities to learn both inside and outside the classroom.

To do an even better job, we have reorganized our experiential learning offerings under one umbrella, with Professor Joel Schumm assuming a new leadership role as our Director of Experiential Learning. Within the past year, we also have increased the number of externships and clinics so that our students have an even wider array of choices for hands-on experience than we offered in the past. For example, we now have eight live-client clinics, including a new Conservation Law Clinic that was established just this semester. Our Program on Law and State Government currently offers externships at 56 different government offices, and our corporate and non-profit externships include opportunities at Eli Lilly and Company, Ingersoll Rand, the NCAA and USA Track & Field, just to name a few.

A few weeks ago, our school hosted a series of online chats for prospective students. I personally participated, along with several members of the school's staff and current students in our J.D., LL.M. and M.J. programs. The students' enthusiasm about McKinney Law and its programs was gratifying to witness. One J.D. student talked at length about experiential learning, saying that "at McKinney, you can try your hand at so many different types of law—while you're a student—to help you decide which career path you want to choose." Another listed a host of externships and clinics in which she had participated during her time as a student. Listening to all of this confirmed what I already knew. We have been excelling at experiential learning for years—and we're only getting better.

As alumni of the school, you are well aware of the many opportunities that have existed here, and you have told us that your court externships, clinical opportunities, and skills courses were extremely valuable aspects of your legal education.

If you have ideas related to new experiential learning options for our students, I would welcome your sharing those thoughts with me. We value our alumni contributions to the richness of our academic life here at McKinney. It is one of the things that makes our school truly special.

We are also thankful for your philanthropic support, and in this issue of our magazine, we include the annual dean's report, recognizing those of you who have made important contributions to the financial health of McKinney Law. For that, we are extremely grateful.

Professor Joel Schumm Presented with Public Service Award

Professor Joel Schumm, '98, was presented with the Indiana State Bar Association's David Hamacher Public Service Award on October 16 during the association's annual meeting.

Those who nominated Professor Schumm for the honor said that not only was he "a model appellate practitioner in his own right," but also is "producing the next generation of appellate practitioners in his Appellate Law Clinic."

Professor Schumm also received a Presidential Citation for his work as co-chair of the bar's Written Publications Committee, his articles for Res Gestae, and his participation on continuing legal education panels. Of particular note was his work on the ISBA House Joint Resolution 3 Special Committee.

Professor Schumm was recently named director of Experiential Learning at the law school, and as such will oversee the experiential learning opportunities offered at the school. A magna cum laude graduate of the law school, in addition to his new position, he is a clinical professor of law, director of the Appellate Clinic and the Judicial Externship Program.

Professor Nicolas Terry Appointed to Federal Advisory Committee

Professor Nicolas Terry has been appointed to a federal advisory committee that makes policy recommendations concerning consumer engagement in healthcare and the development of health information technology. The committee is the Consumer Workgroup of the Health and Human Services Health Information Committee.

The Consumer Workgroup will provide input and make recommendations on policy issues and opportunities for health information technology to strengthen the ability of consumers, patients, caregivers, and health care providers to manage health and health care for themselves or others.

"Thinking about the interface between health care and information technology is my passion. I am honored by this appointment," Professor Terry said.

"Health law is one of our signature programs at IU McKinney, and our faculty members are recognized nationally and internationally for their scholarship in the field," said Dean Andy Klein. "Professor Terry's appointment to the Consumer Workgroup is an acknowledgement of his expertise in healthcare information technology. It's exciting for him, and a great opportunity for our students to learn about his cutting edge work."

Professor Terry is the Hall Render Professor of Law and co-director of the Hall Center for Law and Health at the law school.

Deborah Daniels, '77, Named Managing Partner of Krieg DeVault

Deborah Daniels, '77, has been named managing partner of the Indianapolis law firm Krieg DeVault, effective January 1, 2015, when she begins a three-year term in the post. She will succeed longtime managing partner Michael E. Williams, '82.

During Williams' tenure as managing partner, Krieg DeVault has grown from about 35 attorneys based in Indianapolis to a firm of 150 professionals with offices in various parts of Indiana and four other states.

Daniels' leadership skills have been honed in her past service, including at the U.S. Department of Justice, as United States Attorney for the Southern District of Indiana; as Director of the National Office for Weed and Seed; and as Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs, where she managed multiple research and grant-making agencies and oversaw a $4.2 billion budget. As United States Attorney, she served on the Attorney General's Advisory Committee of United States Attorneys, advising on management issues on a nationwide basis. She has also served as Executive Director, and more recently Board Chair, of the Greater Indianapolis Progress Committee; and as President of the Sagamore Institute.

Daniels, a cum laude graduate of IU McKinney, has been an active business and civic leader, serving as a board member of various community organizations.

News Briefs

John Pistole, '81, Named President-Elect of Anderson University

John Pistole, '81, has been named president-elect of Anderson University in Anderson, Indiana. He will begin his new role in March of 2015. The church founded the university in 1917. He takes over from James L. Edwards, who has held the position since 1990, the longest serving public or private university president in Indiana.

Pistole's family has a long history with Anderson University. He earned his bachelor's degree from Anderson University in 1978, and both of his parents were alumni.

Pistole began a career with the FBI in 1983 before he rose through the ranks and was appointed deputy director in 2004. He was nominated by President Barack Obama to be director of the Transportation Security Administration (TSA), a role he took over in Summer 2010. As head of the TSA, Pistole led a 60,000-strong workforce, and oversaw the security operations of more than 450 airports throughout the United States.

Johnny Pryor Named to Executive Committee for AALS Section on Student Services

Assistant Dean for Student Affairs, Johnny Pryor, has been appointed to the American Association of Law Schools (AALS) Section on Student Services Executive Committee.

AALS is a nonprofit educational association that represents 178 schools across the country. It also provides professional development for law faculty and administrators.

Pryor joined the law school in January 2011. A 2002 graduate of the IU Maurer School of Law, he served as an assistant prosecutor in Clark County, Ohio, where he worked primarily in the civil division, but also handled criminal matters ranging from juvenile to adult felony cases. While working as an assistant prosecutor, Pryor also served as a volunteer coach for Wittenberg University, his alma mater where he graduated cum laude with a bachelor's degree in English and political science. He coached the university's first mock trial team. Inspired by his work with students, he decided to pursue a career in higher education administration.

Additionally, in October, Pryor was a panelist at the 10th annual National Black Pre-Law Conference and Law Fair in Houston, Texas.

Lun Kham Pieper, '09, Named Burmese Outreach Specialist for Marion County Prosecutor's Office

Lun Kham Pieper, '09, has been named as the Burmese Outreach Specialist for the Marion County Prosecutor's Office, where she will also serve as a deputy prosecutor with the Special Victim's Team, Domestic Violence Department.

In this new role, she will be responsible for the office's outreach into the Burmese community, mostly providing education and helping the community find the resources it needs.

Pieper had previously worked as a solo practitioner and as a court-approved translator/interpreter for Burmese and Chin (Tiddim) languages. In her law practice, she handled mostly immigration cases, as well as a few criminal defense and family law cases. Most of her clients are refugees from Burma. In her work as a translator/interpreter, she provided language services during a two-week child homicide trial in Salt Lake City, among other cases. Pieper also has worked as a court-approved interpreter for the Marion County courts, the Marion County Probation Department, and Community Corrections.

More than just a GAME

Alumni Mix
Law and Sports

by Alicia Dean Carlson

From youth athletics to professional leagues, there are few aspects of sports that are not touched in some way by the law. In fact, sports can present some issues unique to the industry, making a lawyer's skills extremely important.

While sometimes a sports-related job is a graduate's first position out of law school, often alumni arrive in the field after more traditional legal pursuits. For example, Ryan Vaughn, '03, was an attorney with Barnes & Thornburg, and later served as Chief of Staff to Indianapolis Mayor Greg Ballard prior to being named president of Indiana Sports Corp in September. The Indiana Sports Corp board of directors pointed to his experience in the Mayor's Office and service on the Super Bowl XLVI Host Committee, the Super Bowl LII Bid Committee and the Indiana Host Committee for the 2015 NCAA Final Four, as making him particularly suited for the position.

We invite you to read about other alumni involved in sports-related endeavors. Here is just a sampling of the many entities that have sports-minded McKinney alumni on their rosters:

Indiana University

Fans are never short of advice for IU Vice President and Director of Intercollegiate Athletics, Fred Glass, '84, who admits that there is a never-ending supply of it. But he'd be more concerned if his email inbox was empty.

"I'd be very worried if people were not sharing their perspectives," Glass says. "I think that aspect of it is great. People care a lot. They have questions and want to share ideas. I try to be accessible for that."

Maybe Glass has such a positive attitude because he really likes every aspect of running the $75 million, 350-employee organization. His favorite part is interacting with athletes, but he also likes the nitty-gritty business side, including budgeting, marketing and human resources.

"I really like running an enterprise," Glass says. "When the enterprise is running athletics at your alma mater, at a beautiful university, it just doesn't get much better than that for me."

Glass is also comfortable as a university spokesperson thanks to law school, which cured him of his fear of public speaking.

"The idea of the Socratic method, having to stand up and speak in class literally made me sick," he says. "I went to Professor [William] Harvey and told him, 'Listen, I am very nervous about speaking in class.'"

"He said 'That's OK, we will get you over that. I'll call on you tomorrow.' Not what I had in mind, but one of the best things that law school did was give me confidence."

In June, Glass unveiled the Indiana University Student-Athlete Bill of Rights, a first-of-its kind, 10-point document that sets forth the University's commitment to student-athletes.

Glass sketched the outline of the Student-Athlete Bill of Rights poolside over spring break last year and faculty, athletes and IU administrators refined it over the summer.

"I think we produced a pretty terrific document," he says.

National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA)

As a former student athlete, Elizabeth Ramsey, '06, tries to be reassuring to basketball players she meets as associate director of enforcement at the NCAA.

The fact that Ramsey played basketball at the University of Indianapolis, reassures some coaches, too.

"I am currently the only female on our [Basketball Development] team, so one of the first questions coaches ask is: "Did you play basketball?" It gives me instant credibility because they know I understand not just the demands on players and coaches, but also just how much they love the game," Ramsey says. "I try to give players that background, too, to let them know that I understand that they might be nervous, and I might be nervous in their shoes, too."

In fact, Ramsey is part of an increasing effort on the part of NCAA's enforcement staff to become proactive instead of reactive in heading off major offenses like recruiting violations and academic fraud, as well as the thousands of secondary violations that are processed each year.

That involves outreach, education and a lot of travel. Ramsey spent the equivalent of three months on the road in 2014, meeting with athletes, coaches, NBA scouts and even sportswear reps from companies like Nike, Adidas and Under Armour. She formerly served as liaison to women's basketball.

During law school, Ramsey worked as a law clerk at the NCAA, which opened the door for a permanent position.

For Doug Healey, '07, life has always revolved around sports, even before he became associate director of academic review at the NCAA.

Healey's team processes initial-eligibility waivers, which determine whether student-athletes who do not meet minimum academic requirements may receive their athletics scholarships, practice and compete in the first year at a Division I or II institution. For such student-athletes, the waiver process allows Healey's team an opportunity to evaluate extenuating circumstances, apply guidelines set by member institutions and provide relief, if warranted.

"We recognize the value of access to higher education, the importance of athletics scholarships to student-athletes and their families, and the impact of our decisions on everyone involved," says Healey, whose team processed more than 800 waivers during the 2013-14 academic year. "We have the ability to provide life-changing opportunities for student-athletes."

On a daily basis, Healey implements skills learned in Dean Andrew Klein's first-year torts class. "Dean Klein emphasized the importance of using a consistent analysis framework, and we take that approach to reach consistent waiver decisions," Healey says.

After trying out for Purdue University's baseball team, Healey began covering sports for the student newspaper and then had internships with WTHR in Indianapolis and Chelsea Football Club in England. A media law class turned his ambition from becoming a sportscaster to pursuing a legal education.

Elizabeth Ramsey, '06, and Doug Healey, '07, use their legal expertise at the NCAA.

The Sun Conference

Mark Pope, '77, is Commissioner of the Sun Conference. He is shown here with legendary basketball coach, Rollie Massimino.

Following a very late admission to law school—he was on the waiting list until just before orientation—Healey earned a spot on the INDIANA LAW REVIEW, clerked at Ice Miller and externed with NCAA enforcement before graduating cum laude and being elected graduation speaker.

Healey began his career in Ice Miller's business litigation practice group but ultimately returned to the NCAA in 2009. "I have a strong passion for sports and appreciate having an opportunity to use legal skills in the sports industry," he says.

The Sun Conference

As commissioner of The Sun Conference, Mark Pope, '77, is just as likely to boast about the grade point averages of the conference's student-athletes as he is about their achievements in sports.

"If you graduate kids with a good sense of competition, who are doing good things, what a satisfying feeling that is," Pope says. "We're not going to have basketball players who are top NBA draft picks, but our kids are graduating and doing great things. That's the real high in this job: seeing the finished product."

Pope took over as commissioner of the Sun Conference in 2011. The conference, headquartered in Tampa, Florida, is a member of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, the governing body of athletic programs at smaller colleges and universities.

Pope was no stranger to the NAIA. He spent four years as athletic director at the University of St. Francis in Fort Wayne, where the men's basketball team captured the 2010 NAIA Division II Men's Basketball National title and the football, men's basketball and women's basketball teams all achieved Top-10 national rankings in 2010-11.

Before that, Pope was athletic director at Indiana University-Purdue University Fort Wayne for six years, the result of a career change at the end of a 12-year career with the Lincoln Financial Group as senior counsel.

Whether it's financial services or college sports, a law degree has served him well, he says.

"Every single day, it's been a big help," Pope says.

Horizon League

At the Horizon League offices in downtown Indianapolis, Deputy Commissioner Julie Roe Lach, '04, and Assistant Director of Compliance Kyle Fairchild, '12, have come to expect the unexpected.

Questions come in from members of the nine-school, NCAA Division I collegiate athletic conference. Contracts are in need of review. Coaches want NCAA regulations decoded. The League also hosts 19 championships and is currently launching a live streaming of competition on ESPN 3, which requires analyzing media rights.

"When you are a league our size, you get to see it all," Fairchild says. "It's all hands on deck."

Lach herself was a college athlete, a power forward on the Millikan University women's basketball team, which advanced to the Sweet 16 all four years Lach played, and to the Elite 8 twice. After a college internship in 1997, she joined the NCAA on a permanent basis and seized the opportunity to attend law school when the NCAA moved its headquarters to Indianapolis.

“My aspiration was always to go to law school,” Lach says. “I got an incredible opportunity when I realized I could go to the law school in the evening and work at the NCAA.”

Fairchild, too, put time in during an externship at the NCAA before graduating from law school and worked in compliance in athletics at Loyola University in Chicago before returning to his hometown and the Horizon League job.

That’s why Lach is currently working with the law school to establish an extern partnership with the Horizon League—and why she urges other alumni to do the same.

“This is really fertile ground for us to do something special and I’d urge any alumni who are working in the sports industry to get a program started,” Lach says. “Law students can provide high-quality work. The more opportunities we create, the more we can differentiate our law school. It’s a win-win for all.”

Indianapolis Motor Speedway (IMS) and INDYCAR

Most Indy 500 fans have to wait for the month of May for a trip to the speedway. For alumni J. Douglas Boles, '00, Gretchen Snelling, '95 and Tiffany Hemmer, '94, being at the historic oval in Speedway, Indiana is all in a day’s work.

Hemmer grew up within walking distance of the track, went to DePauw University and then law school before trading a planned career in politics (she worked in Washington, D.C. for Vice President Dan Quayle, '74) for INDYCAR as one of its first employees in 1995. She helped build the league from scratch in preparation for the 1996 inaugural racing season.

As vice president of legal for INDYCAR, she works on rule-books, consent and liability releases, appeals procedures and insurance requirements. Hemmer is the first-ever female recipient of the United States Auto Club’s Outstanding Official Award and serves on numerous committees and boards related to racing.

Kyle Fairchild, '12, and Julie Roe Lach, '04, serve as Assistant Director of Compliance and Deputy Commissioner, respectively, at the Horizon League.

Even after attending more than 100 races and serving as an official for 19 Indianapolis 500 Mile Race events, Hemmer says she still gets goose bumps at “Back Home Again in Indiana” and can still be star struck in encounters with the racing legends she sees, but she’s very aware of her role. “It is important to do my job as a lawyer for the league,” Hemmer says.

It was Hemmer who, several years ago, asked Al Unser, Sr. to take Hulman & Co. general counsel Gretchen Snelling for a ride on her birthday at a California racetrack. Snelling describes the experience as “exciting and terrifying” and a departure from the job that is the “most traditionally legal” at the parent company for IMS.

The Evansville native studied economics at Purdue and, after law school, went to work for Ice Miller, which has had strong ties with IMS. So did Snelling: Her father has attended 65 Indy 500 races, and Snelling remembers her first race as a 15-year-old teen.

These days, she tries to keep up with—and keep within the bounds of legal reason—the ideas of Boles, who as president of IMS admits that he wears two hats: that of a promoter and of the lawyer.

Tiffany Hemmer, '94, Gretchen Snelling, '95, and Doug Boles, '00, use their legal knowledge every day at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Mark Richards, '85
Ice Miller LLP.

Mark Richards, '85, is an attorney at Ice Miller, focusing his practice on the business of sports.

Sometimes the promoter wins: Boles skydived into the infield ahead of the 2014 Red Bull Indianapolis Grand Prix in August, went “glamping” with fans in the infield at the Indy 500 in May, and generally revels in working at the track that he’s loved since before he was 10, when his father, Hendricks Circuit Court Judge Jeffrey V. Boles, ‘74, allowed him to attend his first race.

Boles worked on a motor sports initiative as an aide to former Indianapolis Mayor Stephen Goldsmith, and co-founded Panther Racing, which won IndyCar championships in 2001 and 2002. He joined the IMS staff as vice president of communications in 2010 and was named president in 2013.

Last December, racing legend Mario Andretti tweeted “Love the passion @jdouglas4 is showing for the @IMS, no better man for the job. #Indy500.”

For Boles it was a big moment. “I’d be hard-pressed to think of something more satisfying than that,” he says.

Ice Miller LLP

Like many Indiana native sons, Mark Richards, '85 grew up a sports enthusiast and an Indy 500 fan.

So it’s especially satisfying to Richards that he’s found a practice that combines his experience in business and tax law with the business of sports.

As an IU grad with a degree in accounting, Richards focused his efforts in law school on tax courses with plans for a practice in business and business litigation. He learned to sweat the details under the tutelage of Professor Lawrence A. Jegen III, who once kept him in a “two-hour hotbox” of questioning during a tax procedure class.

“Class was never boring,” Richards says.

During his 25-year career, Richards has worked on behalf of numerous sports organizations and athletes, including as counsel to the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, the IndyCar Series, and driver Tony Stewart, as well as being involved in high-profile deals like the formation of the IndyCar Series, the launch of the Brickyard 400 NASCAR race, the US Grand Prix Formula One race and the unification of open wheel racing in 2008, an event that Richards calls “transformative” for motorsports.

He’s also represented sponsors, athletes, coaches, schools and sports organizations outside of racing, including clients associated with the NFL, NBA and the NCAA.

“What I do today is still fun, still exciting and still filled with unexpected moments,” Richards says. “I’ve had the opportunity to work with a lot of great companies and a lot of great people, helping them solve problems.”

Wesley Zirkle, '01, is General Counsel at JMI.

As compelling as the names and stories of his clients are, in Richards' view the business side of sports is just that: a business. “Fans are customers, and like any other business, those in the business of providing entertainment have to keep their customers satisfied,” he says.

Wesley Zirkle, '01, isn't really a fan of motorsports as much as he is a fan of the business of motorsports.

It's a fine distinction Zirkle makes, based on his experience since 2004 at Zionsville-based JMI (formerly Just Marketing International). As general counsel, Zirkle negotiates deals for clients, including car branding, signage and naming rights.

“I care passionately about this business, and it is immensely fascinating,” Zirkle says. “You just can't be too starry-eyed about the business. It's an entertainment product. As a lawyer, I'm part of the business and see all the back-end stuff. You just don't look at sports the same way.”

He cares so much about the business, that he co-founded The Racing Attorney Conference (TRAC) with fellow McKinney alumnus Mark Richards eight years ago. The group brings together attorneys in open wheel and stock car racing to discuss industry issues.

As an undergrad at Wabash College, Zirkle was fascinated by his religious studies classes and toyed with the idea of being a professor. But he didn't relish the life of a starving academic and applied to law school.

"I did law school all wrong," Zirkle confesses. He was managing a friend's band and skipped opportunities for moot court and law reviews. But hanging out with the band and getting his law degree paid off: At a job interview at CMG Worldwide, the Fishers-based celebrity-licensing giant, Zirkle bonded with the head of legal over music.

Zirkle cut his teeth on trademark and entertainment law at CMG. It was an "incredible" launching pad, he says.

In the relatively small, somewhat insular world of motorsports, Zirkle describes his current job as 'putting the pieces of the puzzle together.' "I love doing deals. That's what fires me up."

Exclusive Sports Group, LLC

Andrew "Buddy" Baker, '98, was student assistant to Purdue Head Basketball Coach Gene Keady from 1990

through 1994.

"I thought that was the end of the road," in terms of his involvement in sports, Baker says.

But when Baker started law school, he caught glimpses of how the worlds of sports and law could intersect. Coach Keady introduced him to Indianapolis attorney Scott Montross, '71, who was representing his son Eric, drafted by the Boston Celtics at the same time Baker was interning in his law office.

After he graduated from law school, Baker went to work for the firm of Dann Pecar and began dabbling in sports law work.

"What I learned was that A, this was something I was passionate about, and B, it was something I could be successful at and C, you could only be successful if you have the resources to devote to it," Baker says.

Baker started the sports and entertainment division at Ice Miller, but in 2008 he purchased the assets of the sports practice to launch Exclusive Sports Group, a full-service sports agency dedicated to meeting the personal and professional needs of athletes and coaches.

In 2009, Christopher Lane, '98, joined Exclusive Sports Group. Lane and Baker knew each other from law school, where they bonded over sports rivalries. Baker, the Purdue fan who loved the Yankees, and Lane, a Notre Dame grad who favored the Detroit Tigers.

Together, Baker, Lane, and staff provide every possible service to more than 50 professional athletes and coaches, including dozens of current and retired NFL and NBA players.

Baker is a certified contract advisor with the National Football League Players Association and the National Basketball Players Association. He is one of 15 agents on the NFLPA advisory committee, and helped draft the NFLPA Agent Exam.

Whether it's negotiating a contract, providing post career counseling, creating marketing opportunities, finding the best surgeon to repair a player's injury or even planning a wedding, the agency brings together both the legal perspective and the sports agency role, according to Lane.

While the team becomes close to their client-players, it's not necessarily glamorous. They aren't hanging out in locker rooms, but instead are using their legal skills to help clients manage their fame and fortune. "It's not Jerry McGuire," Lane says.

"Our goal is to help our clients be successful in their careers and in their lives," Baker says. "Our core business is our clients, their careers and their lives."

Pacers Sports & Entertainment

In sports, players who want to win can't be afraid to be aggressive. And that's true, too, for young attorneys jockeying for a spot in the competitive world of the sporting industry, according to Catherine Nichols, '14.

"Ultimately, job opportunities come through networking," Nichols says. "You shouldn't be afraid to go after those big opportunities and take on challenging tasks with confidence."

Nichols, a Terre Haute native, went straight to law school after earning her undergraduate degree in English at IU-Bloomington. Sports law wasn't on her radar until she took a class during her second year with Professor Gary Roberts, who was also dean of McKinney at the time.

On Roberts' advice, Nichols started looking to meet people in the industry. As an insurance defense intern, Nichols got another piece of valuable advice: Be really good at what you do and you'll land a job.

Nichols was ready when opportunities came her way.

She completed an externship at the NCAA and, shortly after, landed an internship with the Indiana Pacers. Now associate legal counsel, Nichols works in transactional law, including intellectual property, promotional marketing, data privacy and employment law.

rector for the RCA Tennis Championships as well as for the U.S. Open Tennis Championships in New York City.

Although Douglas Brown, '84, was seemingly destined for law school—as the son of the late Jackson County Judge Robert R. Brown, '63, he declared his intentions back in kindergarten—but he never intended to get into sports law.

Yet Brown has had a 14-year tenure as a member and officer of the Capital Improvement Board of Managers of Marion County, a nine-member body charged with the ownership, financing and operation of Indianapolis' sports, convention and public assembly venues, including the Indiana Convention Center, Lucas Oil Stadium, Bankers Life Fieldhouse and Victory Field. He's been the CIB's designee on the board of directors of the Indiana Sports Corp, the not-for-profit enterprise responsible for promoting sporting events in Central Indiana, including U.S. Olympic Trials, NCAA events and the 2012 Super Bowl.

And on behalf of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, one of the group's biggest clients, Brown led the 2013 effort to pass legislation creating a $100 million state investment in the historic track.

He's also represented players, including former Indiana Pacer center Jeff Foster and former Colts center Ray Donaldson, and horseracing operations like Indiana Downs and Swifty Farms.

Athletes and people involved in sports tend to be "Type-A, interesting people," Brown says.

"My practice is unusual in that it is quite varied," Brown says. "I spend half my time doing general corporate work on the law firm side and also do a lot of public affairs work and manage the Bose Public Affairs Group. Between those two different activities, every single day is different. I like that aspect of it."

The Vanderbilt grad attended law school full time for his first year and switched to the evening program so he could work at the Indiana Supreme Court. He worked first at Kroger Gardis & Regas LLP, then at Stewart & Irwin before joining Bose McKinney & Evans four years ago.

H. Kennard Bennett, '82, Monica Foster, '83, and the Honorable Brett J. Niemeier, '85, were the three IU McKinney alumni honored during the law school's annual Public Interest Recognition Dinner, held on April 12 in the IU McKinney atrium. Congressman André Carson, who represents Indiana's 7th Congressional District, was the evening's keynote speaker. The annual event is presented by the law school and the student group, Equal Justice Works.

Bennett, '82, Indianapolis, focuses his practice on guardianships and consumer health issues, including the civil prosecution of nursing home abuse and neglect. He is a member of the ISBA Elder Law Section and a long-time member of the National Academy of Elder Law Attorneys. Foster, '83, Indianapolis, leads the Indiana Federal Community Defender's Office. Prior to this role, she made a name for herself in private practice defending indigent clients who faced the death penalty, both at trial and on appeal. Judge Niemeier, '85, Evansville, is a juvenile court judge. Judge Niemeier is known for his work on behalf of children. In addition, he created an emergency guardianship program for the elderly and those with disabilities, and a foundation for families who have emergency needs.

Congressman Carson was elected in 2008, after serving in the Indianapolis-Marion County City-County Council for the 15th district in 2007. He served in law enforcement for several years before embarking on his political career, working as an investigator for the Indiana State Excise Police, then the Indiana Department of Homeland Security.

Proceeds from the event support IU McKinney's Loan Repayment Assistance Program Endowment, which helps graduates working in public interest law to repay their student loans. ❖

Dickson Steps Down As Chief Justice

By Rebecca Trimpe

Justice Brent Dickson, '68, did what he's always done when he's been asked to serve.

He said yes.

Dickson was named Chief Justice of Indiana on May 15, 2012.

Reflecting on his time as Chief Justice, Dickson says he is pleased he had the opportunity.

"I've had two years of a marvelous experience," Dickson said. "It's been one of the privileges of my life."

Sworn in as Chief Justice of the Indiana Supreme Court in May of 2012, Dickson, '68, was a natural for the post, having served on the court for 26 years when it was announced that then-Chief Justice Randall T. Shepard would retire. Dickson was appointed to the Indiana Supreme Court in January 1986, the longest-serving justice on the court.

Justice Mark Massa, '89, was press secretary for then-Governor Robert Orr, and wrote the press release announcing Dickson's elevation to the high court.

"I've known Justice Dickson for nearly 30 years," Massa said. "He's the same person today that he was then." Massa, who clerked for Justice Shepard from 1991 until early 1993, added, "Justice Dickson was so kind to all the clerks, not just his own."

While serving as acting chief, Dickson said he was approached by a variety of people, from trial judges to then-Governor Mitch Daniels, to take on the leadership role on a permanent basis.

Dickson's approach to leading the court was to do so with the input of his colleagues. As an example, budget decisions were made with the involvement of everyone on the high court, as were other issues requiring attention that would have far-reaching impact on the judicial system statewide.

Dickson is known for his commitment for furthering civility in the legal profession, and Massa sees that commitment as an expression of Dickson's values.

"He's just such a decent man, and I think that drives a desire in him to see that all lawyers treat each other the same way," Massa said. "A more efficient delivery of pro bono service springs from that same well; from his decency and kindness and commitment to his fellow citizens, whatever their status might be."

Justice Steven David, '82, echoed that sentiment. "Justice Dickson's service as Chief Justice mirrors his tenure as one of the longest serving Justices in the history of the state of Indiana—steady, reliable and the consummate professional," said Justice David. "He has always been a supporter of the Rule of Law and has always searched for consensus and collaboration. His legacy will reflect very favorably upon his service and our state, well into subsequent centuries."

Dickson stepped down as chief in August of 2014. ♦

Panelists that evening were welcomed by Dean Andrew R. Klein, far left, and included IU Professor Khadija Khaja of the IU School of Social Work and Faculty Fellow for Common Theme; Professor Michael Sliter of the Purdue School of Science; Professor Sheila Kennedy, ’75, of the IU School of Public and Environmental Affairs; Professor R. 2014 School Year Culminates in Evening of Celebration for Alumni & Graduates

The law school's annual Evening of Celebration took place at Inlow Hall on May 9. This year's event, co-sponsored by the IU McKinney Law Alumni Association and the law school, brought together alumni and friends along with members of the Class of 2014 and their guests. In addition to honoring graduates, the event recognized three very distinguished alumni leaders, as well as one up-and-coming alumnus.

After toasting the new J.D., LL.M. and S.J.D. graduates, Master of Ceremonies, Dean Andrew R. Klein, along with IUAA Law Alumni Board Awards Committee Chair, Paul Kruse, '81, presented James Burns, '75; Gil Holmes, '99; and the Honorable Margret Robb, '78 with Distinguished Alumni Awards, and Tadd Miller, '06 with the Early Career Achievement Award.

Jim Burns, '75

Burns, whose son Jonathan, '06, also graduated from IU McKinney, made reference to three generations of "Burns boys" with connections to the school and revealed in his acceptance speech that his father had started but was unable to finish law school in the Maennerchor building. Jim Burns was a magna cum laude graduate of IU McKinney and currently works as senior counsel at Ice Miller LLP. Before going into private practice, he spent 28 years at Eli Lilly and Company, retiring as the company's assistant general counsel. He also served as general counsel at Elizabeth Arden, Inc., and at Elanco Products Company in New York City. He has been active as an alumnus of the school, volunteering his time to work with students. He also has been instrumental in coordinating the annual CLE program, which generates scholarship funds. Burns has been a member of law school's Board of Visitors since 1999, and has served as the board's chair.

Gil Holmes, '99

Gil Holmes was recognized for his career, which has been as varied as it is distinguished. Before attending law school, he served in the United States Army and is a decorated veteran of the Vietnam War, retiring at the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He also worked as director of personnel for the Indianapolis Museum of Art, Department Head for Transportation Services in the Human Resources Division at Methodist Hospital, Commissioner of the Indiana Bureau of Motor Vehicles (BMV) and Chairman of the BMV Commission, Second Vice President and Director of Facilities and Services for Corporate Procurement for Lincoln National Corporation in Fort Wayne, President and CEO for IndyGo, and Executive Director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana. He also is the founder and president of Gil Holmes Associates, a management consulting firm. Holmes was honored for his career in public interest law by the IU McKinney student group Equal Justice Works in 2011. In addition he was named a Kentucky Colonel in 1989 and a Sagamore of the Wabash in 1996.

The Honorable Margret Robb, '78

A magna cum laude graduate, Judge Margret Robb's long history of loyal service to the legal profession and her alma mater began over three decades ago. The first woman to serve as Chief Judge of the Indiana Court of Appeals, she was appointed to the state's intermediate appellate court in 1998 by Governor Frank O'Bannon. She has been an officer of the Indiana State Bar Association (ISBA), a Fellow of the Indiana State Bar Foundation, Tippecanoe County Bar Association, National Association of Women Judges, and the Bankruptcy Section of the ISBA. She also serves on the board of the IU McKinney Alumni Association. Among the honors she has received, Robb was a recipient of a 1993 ISBA "Celebrating 100 years of Women in the Legal Profession Award," the Maynard K. Hine Distinguished Alumni Award for service to IUPUI and IU in 2001, the ISBA's Women in the Law award in 2005, the IU Alumni Association's President's Award in 2010, the IBA's Women and the Law Committee's Antoinette Dakin Leach award in 2011, and the Indiana Commission for Women's Torchbearer Award for 2014; she was also honored as a Trailblazer for her contributions to Indiana and the law.

Tadd Miller, '06

The recipient of the 2014 Early Career Achievement Award was entrepreneur Tadd Miller, President and Co-founder of Milhaus Development. Milhaus specializes in the development of mixed-use and multi-family real estate projects. The properties are located throughout the Midwest and in Florida. Miller is a member of the Urban Land Institute, the International Council of Shopping Centers, and the Indiana Leadership Forum. In addition, he is a member of the IU McKinney Alumni Association Executive Committee. Miller was named "Young Professional of the Year" by the group "Young Professionals of Central Indiana" in 2006, was listed by the Indianapolis Business Journal in "Who's Who Behind the Scenes in Real Estate," in 2005; "Forty Under 40" in 2008, and "Who's Who in Commercial Real Estate" in 2010. ♦

McKinney Law Welcomed Congresswoman Susan W. Brooks, '85 as Commencement Speaker

Congresswoman Susan W. Brooks, '85, delivered the commencement address for graduates of the Indiana University Robert H. McKinney School of Law at a ceremony on May 10 in the Sagamore Ballroom at the Indiana Convention Center.

It wasn't her first time at the podium for the law school's graduation ceremony—Brooks was chosen by her peers to speak during her own IU McKinney commencement in 1985.

"Susan's career path is an excellent example of how a law degree can be used in so many ways," said IU McKinney Law Dean Andrew R. Klein. "She has experience in private practice, at several levels of government service, as well as in higher education. Her remarks to the Class of 2014 were both inspirational and aspirational."

Brooks was recently re-elected to her second term representing Indiana's 5th District in the U.S. House of Representatives. She currently serves on the Homeland Security, Ethics, and Education and the Workforce committees. She is also chair of the Committee on Homeland Security's Subcommittee on Emergency Preparedness, Response and Communications.

Before her election to Congress, Brooks served as senior vice president and general counsel for Ivy Tech Community College. Before that, she was U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Indiana, appointed by President George W. Bush in 2001. In addition, she previously served as a deputy mayor in Indianapolis during Steve Goldsmith's administration.

Earlier in her career, Brooks practiced law at the Indianapolis firm of Ice Miller and also served as a criminal defense attorney for Indianapolis-based McClure McClure & Kammen.

A recipient of IU McKinney's Alumna of the Year award in 2006, Brooks also is a member of the law school's Board of Visitors.

The law school awarded 293 J.D. degrees and 29 LL.M. degrees during the ceremony. The law school also awarded 63 certificates to J.D. graduates in the areas of environmental, health, intellectual property, and international law. In addition to their academic pursuits, the graduating class contributed more than 22,000 hours of pro bono service to the central Indiana community while attending law school.

Student speakers at this year's ceremony were Wei Li, LL.M. Division; Joseph Cermak, full-time J.D. Division; R. Zachary Karanovich, part-time J.D. Division. Vice Dean Antony Page presented the Faculty Prize to Emma Mahern, who is also a Kennedy Scholar. Professors Frank Sullivan, Jr. and Lloyd T. Wilson, Jr. performed the hooding of LL.M. graduates, while Professors Eric Dannenmaier, Lahny Silva, Frank Sullivan, and R. George Wright, '82, hooded the J.D. class. Professors George Edwards and Cynthia Baker were ceremony Marshals for both the law school's event and the all-campus celebration on May 11th. ♦

Robert H. McKinney Bust Unveiled

On June 17, 2014, law school benefactor and namesake, Robert H. McKinney, was on hand for the unveiling of his likeness in the law school's atrium. Members of McKinney's immediate family, along with friends from the law school faculty and staff, were present to celebrate the occasion. The bronze bust installed in the atrium, in front of the Ruth Lilly Law Library, was created by artist/sculptor Jim Beck. Dean Andrew R. Klein said, "We are so very proud of and grateful for our connection to Bob McKinney. It is an honor to have his likeness here for current and future generations of students, faculty and alumni to remember his generosity and the shining example of leadership he has set throughout his life."

Several former deans of the school were present to mark the occasion, including William F. Harvey, Gerald L. Bepko, Susanah M. Mead, '76, and Norman Lefstein. Dean Emeritus Gary R. Roberts participated by phone while travelling out of state. ♦

Judge Jane Magnus-Stinson, '83, Named Outstanding Alumna of the Year

The Honorable Jane Magnus-Stinson, '83, was celebrated as the 2014 Outstanding Alumna of the Year at the 15th annual luncheon presented by the law school's Alumnae Network. The event took place on June 27 at the Woodstock Club in Indianapolis.

Judge Magnus-Stinson's friend from law school, Monica Foster, '83, gave the tribute, showing photos of Magnus-Stinson from throughout her life, and noting what an outstanding scholar she was during her university days; Magnus-Stinson is a cum laude graduate of IU McKinney, as well as Butler University.

While in law school, Magnus-Stinson worked as a clerk at Dann Pecar Newman Talesnick & Kleiman, the firm now known as Benesch. After law school, she began her legal career as an associate at the firm of Lewis Bowman St. Clair & Wagner, now LewisWagner. One of the firm's founding partners, Robert Wagner, '67, was one of her early mentors.

Magnus-Stinson served as executive assistant and then as counsel for then-Governor Evan Bayh from 1991-1995, and was appointed to the Chief-of-Staff position in his administration in 1994. After that she served as judge of the Marion Superior Court in the major felony division from 1995-2007. She was nominated to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana as a magistrate judge in 2007, and was elevated to the Southern District judgeship she now holds in 2010.

Summing up her friend's career and approach to life, Foster said: "When I want to do the right thing, I call Jane; the most loyal friend anyone could ever have." ♦

The Alumnae Network, which hosted the event, is a forum for women graduates to connect with each other, current students, and the law school community. Women graduates of IU McKinney are a rapidly growing and dynamic group of individuals who have blazed trails for later generations of women and have excelled in all areas of legal expertise. Law School Celebrates Maennerchor Era Alumni

The Maennerchor Building was designed by Adolph Scherrer and was used originally as a concert facility for the Indianapolis Maennerchor, a German men's singing organization. It was the site of a song festival in the early 1900s that brought thousands to Indianapolis to participate.

On Wednesday, June 18, the law school hosted a luncheon for all graduates who attended classes in the historic Maennerchor Building, which served as the school's home from 1945 until 1970. Approximately 70 alumni attended the event that took place in the atrium.

Two alumni, the Honorable Betty Barteau, '65, and Jim Voyles, '68, shared memories of their law school days in the Maennerchor Building. The Woodard Room in the Ruth Lilly Law Library, which contains several architectural pieces from the Maennerchor Building (Maennerchor Hall), was open for touring throughout the event.

Maennerchor Hall was designed by architect Adolph Scherrer, who designed many important public structures and residences in the city of Indianapolis during the late 19th century. Born in Switzerland, Scherrer studied in Vienna and Budapest before coming to the United States in the early 1870s. Maennerchor Hall was built in 1907 and originally served as a concert facility for the Indianapolis Maennerchor, a German men's singing organization. ♦

Second Annual Diversity and Alumni Dinner: “Fifty Years of Justice: The Evolution of Civil Rights”

IU McKinney students celebrated their second annual Diversity and Alumni Reception and Dinner, hosted by the Black Law Student Association (BLSA) and the Hispanic Law Society (HLS), on March 30, at Central Library in downtown Indianapolis. The theme for this year's event was “Fifty Years of Justice: The Evolution of Civil Rights,” in commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. More than 100 guests attended the event.

Jennett Hill, '98, senior vice president and general counsel of Citizens Energy Group, was the event's keynote speaker, and talked about the Civil Rights movement from her perspective. She spent much of her childhood living abroad with her parents, and her parents are of two different races. Hill also spoke about the role that the Civil Rights Act has played in her career advancement and her educational opportunities.

Steven Nunez and Francisco Guzman enjoyed the event.

Guests also heard from Dr. Monroe Little, associate professor of history and director of the Africana Studies Program in the IU School of Liberal Arts at IUPUI. He spoke about the context under which the Civil Rights Act was passed, and about what needs to still be accomplished in order to achieve the movement's original goals.

The event planning committee, made up of BLSA president Adey Adenrele, HLS president Adriana Figueroa, HLS vice president Steven Nunez, and BLSA member Dana DeBowles, presented an award to Professor Carlton Waterhouse. The award was made in recognition of his role in the partnership the law school has with

Shortridge Magnet School for Law and Public Policy, and Professor Waterhouse's continued commitment to diversity at IU McKinney. ♦

Professor Nguyen Delivers IP Financing History Lesson

Professor Xuan-Thao Nguyen's first presentation as director of IU McKinney's Center for Intellectual Property Law and Innovation was a lecture entitled, “Financing Innovation: Intellectual Property as Security in Financing, 1845-2014,” and took place September 9 at Inlow Hall.

Looking at the differences in the concepts of chattel mortgages, and mortgages on patents, copyrights, and trademarks, Professor Nguyen delved into opinions from the United States Supreme Court dating back to the 19th century.

Professor Nguyen joined the IU McKinney faculty in Summer 2014. She holds the Gerald L. Bepko Chair in Law, and is an internationally recognized legal scholar, known for her expertise in the intersections of intellectual property, secured transactions, bankruptcy, licensing, and taxation. ♦

Event Examines IP Development, Law and Practice in ASEAN Countries

The development of intellectual property law in Thailand, Vietnam, and other countries that are members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations was the topic of discussion at a Center for Intellectual Property Law and Innovation event on September 19 at Inlow Hall.

Participants also addressed the differences in the way law is practiced in their home countries. Shown in the photo are, from left: Pitchaya Dharmpipit, law lecturer at Assumption University in Bangkok, Thailand and IU McKinney S.J.D. candidate; Ngamprawan Ehsomnuk, director of the law program at Suan Dusit Rajabhat University in Bangkok and legal officer of the University Business Incubator and Technology Licensing Office, as well as IU McKinney S.J.D. candidate; Apinya Buditwuthisagul, law lecturer at the University of the Thai Chamber of Commerce Faculty of Law; Professor Xuan-Thao Nguyen, director of the law school's Center for Intellectual Property and Innovation; Dr. Bich Thao Nguyen, lecturer at Vietnam National University Faculty of Law; and Phuong Cao, an intellectual property lawyer in Hanoi, Vietnam. ♦

Students Get Tips on Landing That First IP Job

On September 2, four recent graduates of IU McKinney Law who work in intellectual property, shared stories with current students regarding how they went about getting their first job in the field.

The alumni who spoke to the students were Matthew Clark, '13, an associate at Meitus Gelburt Rose; Dan Duvall, '13, an associate at Woodard Emhardt Moriarty McNett & Henry; Angela Freeman, '12, an associate at Barnes & Thornburg; and Pervin Taleyarkhan, '13, of the Purdue Research Foundation Office of Technology Commercialization. Professor Xuan-Thao Nguyen, director of the IU McKinney Center for Intellectual Property and Innovation, led the discussion.

"It was definitely a relevant program," said third-year McKinney student Blake Dedas. "It's encouraging, given the current job market status, to hear from others who have been successful and who haven't been out of our shoes too long."

Professor Nguyen first asked the alumni whether they had earned the IP concentration (now a certificate), and all but one indicated that they had.

"It was important to me," Freeman said. "I wanted employers to take me seriously, and I believe it separated me from the crowd."

Externships related to IP were important for Clark during his job search, as were the relationships he built with his adjunct professors at IU McKinney. He took on contract work for his firm until he secured an associate position there.

Duvall mentioned that taking the patent bar as early as possible, and getting out there and networking as much as possible are keys to finding success. "You've got to put yourself out there," he said.

Taleyarkhan agreed, suggesting that students who had some trepidation over asking attorney acquaintances to lunch needed to just ignore their reluctance. "You've got to get over your fear," she said.

And while networking is vital to all students, it's critical to evening students because they're working a day job while others are having networking lunches, Freeman said. She did a great deal of networking during holiday breaks from work and summer breaks as well. ♦

IU McKinney Alumni and Faculty Examine Recent Supreme Court Decisions and IP Impact

Alumni, faculty, and students gathered on September 16 at Inlow Hall to consider the impact recent United States Supreme Court decisions have had on intellectual property practice.

Professor Tom Wilson's International Activities Put Law School on the Global Stage

On June 1st at Renmin University in Beijing, Professor Tom Wilson and U.S. District Court Judge William T. Lawrence, '73, co-hosted the fifth annual reunion for Chinese alumni of the IU McKinney School of Law and for Chinese legal scholars who have been visiting professors or visiting scholars at our law school.

Professor Wilson and Judge Lawrence were also invited to the National Judges College (NJC) of China in Beijing on June 5th. The College is an arm of the Peoples Supreme Court and trains judges at all court levels. Wilson and Lawrence met with NJC Vice President Hao Yinzhong, Director of Foreign Affairs Wang Xiaofang, and Director of Civil and Commercial Teaching Hu Tinye. This was the sixth time Professor Wilson has been invited to the NJC, where he often participates as a lecturer.

Earlier in the summer, Wilson was the Resident Professor at the Chinese Law Summer Program, held at the Renmin University of China Law School in Beijing. In this program, students from IU McKinney School of Law and other law schools from around the U.S. study Chinese law and are taught by Chinese law professors. In addition to four-weeks of in-class instruction, students also participate in law-related field trips to the Peoples Supreme Court, National Peoples Congress, Ministry of Commerce, China International Economic and Trade Arbitration Commission, Jun He Law Firm, and Beijing Intermediate Peoples Court, where they observed a trial. Professor Wilson also arranged internships for IU McKinney School of Law students at three leading Chinese law firms after the conclusion of the courses. Students participated in two-week internships at the Beijing and Shenzhen offices of Jia Yuan Law Firm, at the Qingdao office of the Deheng Law Firm, and at the Nanjing office of the Dacheng Law Firm.

Back in Indianapolis, Professor Wilson directed the third annual Program in American Law for students from Sun Yat-sen University Law School in Guangzhou, China. In this program, which took place from June 30-July 12, Chinese law students learned about the American legal system through in-class instruction and law-related field trips. IU McKinney School of Law professors taught courses on federalism and court organization (Professor Wilson), criminal law (Professor Shawn Boyne), corporate law (Vice Dean Antony Page), administrative law (Professor Carlton Waterhouse) and constitutional law (Professor John Hill). In the field trips, the Sun Yat-sen students met with Lt. Governor Sue Ellspermann, Attorney General Greg Zoeller, Senators Phil Boots and Jim Merritt, Indiana Supreme Court Justice Steven David, '82, U.S. District Court Judge William T. Lawrence, '73, and Faegre Baker Daniels attorney Mark Shope, '12, and manager of diversity and inclusion Brita Horvath, '02.

A similar program took place the beginning of September for law professors and students from Faculdades Integradas Espirito Santenses, located in Vitoria, Brazil. Since 2009, Professor Wilson has directed this program which featured instruction on the American legal system through in-class instruction and law-related field trips. IU McKinney School of Law professors taught courses on federalism and court organization (Professor Wilson), family law (Professor Margaret Ryznar), affirmative action law in U.S. and Brazil (Professor Carlton Waterhouse) and constitutional law (Professor John Hill). ♦

IU McKinney Hosts Visiting Scholars from China

For the Fall 2014 semester, Professor Wilson recruited five leading lawyers in China—all alumni of IU McKinney—to co-teach a course called Doing Business in China, which focuses on cross-border commercial transactions, foreign direct investment, and mergers and acquisitions. Each lawyer taught classes for two or three weeks on topics relating to a variety of Chinese legal areas, including regulation of foreign investment, intellectual property law, contract law, dispute resolution, and labor law.

“This course provides an extraordinary opportunity for IU McKinney students to learn from lawyers who are experts in Sino-U.S. business transactions,” Professor Wilson said. “In addition, it provides a way for IU McKinney alumni to remain connected to their alma mater and to make a meaningful contribution to it.”

Alumni experts teaching this course were Bao Hongbin, Liu & Associates (Houston, Texas), LL.M. ‘04, J.D. ‘07; Jiang Kenan, Lehman, Lee & Xu (Beijing, China), LL.M. ‘05; Yu Hengli, Qatar Petroleum International (Beijing, China), LL.M. ‘05; Zheng Ming, Zhonglun W&D Law Firm (Beijing, China), LL.M. ‘05; Liu Hua, Accenture—China (Beijing, China), LL.M. ‘04

In the second half of 2014, Professor Wilson, Director of the Joint Center for Asian Law Studies at IU McKinney, also served as faculty host for seven visiting scholars from China: Yang Jian (Nanjing Normal University Law School), Zeng Yuanyuan (Renmin University of China Law School), Hu Yikui (Nanjing University of Finance & Economics), Quan Yanmin (Xi’an Jiaotong University), Zhuang Han (Wuhan University Law School), Dong Yue (Ocean University of China), and Zhou Chao (China Agricultural University Department of Law). The Joint Center has hosted 22 visiting scholars from China since 2009. ♦

Professor Dannenmaier Chairs Transboundary Watersheds Panel at North American Environmental Meeting in Yellowknife, Canada

Professor Eric Dannenmaier, who directs IU McKinney's program in Environmental, Energy, and Natural Resources Law, chaired a panel of experts on Transboundary Watersheds at a meeting of the North American Commission for Environmental Cooperation (CEC) in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, Canada in July, 2014.

The Transboundary Watersheds panel was part of a day-long session of the Joint Public Advisory Committee (JPAC) to the CEC on "Transboundary Natural Resource Management: Meeting Challenges through Cooperation and Participation across Borders." The panel focused on regional challenges and successes in promoting conservation and sustainable use of shared natural resources within North America.

Transboundary watersheds include shared river and coastal systems of the three NAFTA Parties, as well as the water basins and the aquatic and water-dependent ecology of those systems. The watersheds panel focused on cooperative measures, including treaties and regional accords, governing the Columbia River Basin and the Great Lakes as well as the impact of national watershed management on North American migratory waterfowl. Panelists who joined Dannenmaier were Kindy Gosal, Director of Special Initiatives for the Columbia Basin Trust in British Columbia; Cameron Davis, Senior Advisor to the Administrator, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, on Great Lakes matters; and Roberto Aviña Carlin, Director of Wildlife Conservation for Mexico's Secretariat of Environment and Natural Resources. More information, including a webcast of the panel is available at www.cec.org.

Professor Dannenmaier was appointed to the JPAC by President Barack Obama in December 2013, and has been working with the CEC since that time to support its work on regional cooperation in environmental matters. While in Canada, Dannenmaier joined the four other United States JPAC members in a private meeting with US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Administrator Gina McCarthy and her senior staff to discuss US administration priorities for regional environmental cooperation.

Professor Dannenmaier also attended a conference for the JPAC on the topic, "North America's Coasts in a Changing Climate." It took place near Washington, D.C. in November. ♦

IU McKinney Offers First-of-its-Kind River Law Course

Students from IU Robert H. McKinney School of Law took part in a unique new Environmental Law course in the summer of 2014, designed to move teaching out of the classroom and into the landscapes where law meets practice. The course in River Law surveyed policies, laws, and institutions that conserve and protect American rivers, tributaries, and watersheds. But instead of meeting on campus in a classroom, Professor Eric Dannenmaier designed the course so that students spent most of their “class time” in canoes and kayaks, or camping alongside the rivers that they were studying.

Offered as an intensive three-week field course, River Law introduced students to some of the key jurisdictional and substantive debates concerning the Clean Water Act, and focused on the institutional challenges of managing rivers under the National Wild and Scenic Rivers Act and comparable state legislation. Common law water access rights and navigational rights were also addressed.

Students began with preparatory class sessions, and then worked in “boat teams” to research four different issues that are closely connected to river management and conservation:

1. Securing Water Rights—including the interplay of public and private rights to access to the river systems and to use the water as a resource
2. Conserving Ecosystems, Species & Habitat—including a consideration for endangered species, wildlife vitality and biological diversity
3. Protecting Water Quality—from effects of agricultural activity, forestry, and nearby municipal and industrial activities
4. Managing Multiple Uses—emphasizing the interplay among socio-cultural values in the implementation of river management plans

Following initial classroom sessions and independent research into their assigned issue areas, students spent a day canoeing on the Blue River in Southern Indiana—the state’s first designated “Natural, Scenic, and Recreational River.” The Blue River flows about 57 miles through Harrison, Washington, and Crawford Counties. The class then traveled to the Missouri Ozarks for a four-day trip to canoe and camp alongside the Jacks Fork River, part of the Ozark National Scenic Riverways (ONSR). The ONSR is the United States’ first designated “Wild and Scenic River,” encompassing about 134 miles of the Jacks Fork and Current Rivers in the Ozark Mountains in Southern Missouri.

The course used a method called “peer-to-peer teaching,” where students research the material and engage each other, rather than relying solely on lectures and instructor-led discussion. Professor Dannenmaier framed the legal issues and guided the conversations, but explained that “the peer-led teaching method requires students to do a lot of independent work and to teach each other about what they have discovered.” He also noted that the field component provided an experience that strengthened the students’ work. “Learning about river law while on a river, next to a river, and sometimes in a river—you can’t beat that,” explained Professor Dannenmaier. “By taking natural resources law to the field, it is easier to understand the values and competing demands that inform policy choices and drive legal institutions. Plus, learning about the environment while in the environment is reinforcing because the issues are more salient and the memories are more vivid—so the learning is more persistent.”

On both rivers, students had an opportunity to meet with experts who provided background regarding the environmental and political challenges faced by conservation agencies, and to talk with local residents and constituencies who use the rivers and depend on them for their livelihood. While on the Jacks Fork River in Missouri, the students also participated in a river clean-up organized by the Missouri Stream Team. ♦

Program on Law and State Government Symposium Searches for Child Trafficking Solutions

The 13th annual Program on Law and State Government Fellowship Symposium delved into a topic that many in law enforcement label a national epidemic: sex trafficking of children. The daylong event, titled “In Our Backyard: State Governments Respond to Sex Trafficking of Children,” was held September 19 in the Wynne Courtroom and atrium at Inlow Hall. Participants were able to hear the viewpoints of police officers and judges on the front lines, policy advisors and scholars studying the problem, as well as from a sex trafficking survivor.

Carlos Gonzalez, one of the 2014 PLSG fellows, presented “A Millennial Approach: Law Enforcement, Prosecution and Policy,” which was the first address of the day. After that, a panel comprised of Casey Bates, a deputy district attorney in Alameda County, California, who is part of the Human Exploitation and Trafficking Unit; Howard Marcus, assistant U.S. attorney of the Eastern District of Missouri and section chief of National Security/Child Exploitation; and Sergeant Brad Hoffeditz, Indiana State Police Legal Counsel, discussed “Approaches to Intergovernmental Collaboration.” Following the panel, Bridgette Carr, director of the Human Trafficking Clinic at the University of Michigan School of Law and a clinical professor of law, presented “What Should Success Look Like?”

The luncheon and keynote speaker was human trafficking survivor and author Holly Austin Smith, who talked about her book Walking Prey: How America's Youth are Vulnerable to Sex Slavery. Her presentation was followed by Chelsea Shelburne, 2014 PLSG fellow, who discussed "Early Detection and Prevention: Using the Juvenile Justice System to Reach Potential Victims and Educate At-Risk Youth."

Shelburne's presentation was followed by a panel tasked with the topic "The Role of State Governments in Juvenile Justice and Recovery." The panelists were Lisa Elwood, director of clinical training and assistant professor of the School of Psychological Sciences at the University of Indianapolis; Christine Raino, policy counsel of Shared Hope International, and Abigail Lawlis Kuzma, director and chief counsel of consumer protection of the Office of the Indiana Attorney General and co-chair designee of Indiana Protection for Abused and Trafficked Humans Task Force.

Director of the Program on Law and State Government, Professor Cynthia Baker, closed the day's events with a discussion of "What Can Lawyers Do?" ♦

The 2014 Program on Law and State Government Symposium Fellows Chelsea Shelburne (left), Carlos Gonzalez (center), and PLSG Director Professor Cynthia Baker (right) took part in the WFYI 90.1 FM radio program No Limits on August 28. Their participation in the program, which takes questions from listeners during the show, served to bring attention to the fact that child sex trafficking is occurring in metropolitan Indianapolis, as well as throughout the state. Shelburne's interest in finding solutions to the issue was piqued after she heard Marion County Juvenile Court Judge Marilyn Moores, '81, talk about the exploitation of children she sees in her court. Gonzalez came to the topic after serving as a law enforcement officer in Oakland, California, in a prior career. He spent Summer 2014 assisting with trial work for the Alameda County, California, prosecutor's office for an internship, which also informed his research into the symposium subject. ♦

Special Program Highlights Anita Hill Story

IP Moot Court Team Advances to Semi-finals

For the third consecutive year, the IU McKinney School of Law took part in the AIPLA Giles Sutherland Rich Memorial Moot Court Competition. The focus of this competition is on patent and intellectual property law, and unlike most moot court competitions, teams in the Rich competition must write briefs for both sides of both issues presented.

The two IU McKinney teams competed in the Chicago regional in March against 26 teams including Northwestern University School of Law, Indiana University Maurer School of Law and University of Wisconsin School of Law. The two issues this year involved subject matter jurisdiction in patent infringement cases and whether a claim for cDNA is patent eligible subject matter under 35 U.S.C. §101 where a naturally occurring processed pseudogene was found to be chemically, structurally, and functionally identical to the claimed cDNA. Both IU McKinney teams advanced to the semifinal round of eight teams.

IU McKinney advocates were 2L Tyler Droste, 3L Stephen Abanise, 2L Andrew Podgorny, and 2L Audrey Wessel. The team was coached by 3L Drake Land, who also is an editor on the INDIANA INTERNATIONAL & COMPARATIVE LAW REVIEW, and serves as a law clerk at Wilson Kehoe Winingham. ♦

IU McKinney Team Wins Midwest Region of Transactional LawMeet Competition, Makes Strong Showing at Nationals

May 2014 graduates Caitlin Brandon, Josh Burrell, and Keaton Miller won the Midwestern Region of the 2014 Transactional LawMeet Competition at Northwestern University Law School on February 28. They faced competition from IU Maurer, Northwestern, and Notre Dame Law, among others.

The competition centered on a transactional negotiation on an indemnification agreement, where the IU McKinney team represented the seller in a stock purchase deal.

Brandon, Burrell, and Miller then traveled to New York City April 3 and 4 for the finals, which were held at the law firm Sullivan & Cromwell, LLP.

“Our team made an extremely strong showing,” said Professor Cynthia Adams, the team’s faculty advisor. In the finals of the competition, Brandon, Burrell, and Miller represented a small pharmaceutical company in a complicated stock purchase transaction. The IU McKinney team came in second place for their contract draft and in fifth place in the negotiations.

“The judges, all experienced transactional lawyers, were extremely complimentary of our team’s performance in the rounds with more than one judge expressing amazement at the level of our team’s negotiating skills and depth of understanding the complex issues,” Professor Adams said. “One judge commented that our team ‘surpassed the skills expected from their firm’s fourth or fifth year associates.’” ♦

Vis Moot Team Competes in Austria

Members of the Willem C. Vis International Commercial Arbitration Moot Team at IU McKinney spent much of the spring semester outlining, briefing, preparing, and finding the funds to travel to Vienna, Austria April 11-18 for the competition.

Team members Devin Hillsdon-Smith, Timothy Dunn, Vanessa Woolsey, and Minji Park took part in pre-moot competitions against national and international competitors, and practiced together every Thursday evening at the law school. The team was coached by Jessica Moyer and Michael Blackwell, '13.

“The team has shown a tremendous amount of dedication, both on a weekly and a daily basis,” said Moyer. The opportunity to put what they’ve learned in the classroom into practice is part of the competition’s appeal for the team.

“I’ve learned a lot just by practicing and taking part in the preparation” for the competition, said Park.

Law School Establishes Master of Jurisprudence Degree Program

The inaugural class of a new degree program at IU McKinney Law, the Master of Jurisprudence program, began in the Summer 2014 with twelve students. The M.J. degree is designed for individuals who do not wish to practice law but who are interested in learning more about the law to enhance their professional skills. The degree consists of thirty credit hours that may be taken on a full-time or part-time basis, either during the day or in the evening. The program is directed by Professor Deborah McGregor.

The McKinney M.J. program is the first of its kind in Indiana. Students work closely with a faculty advisor to create an individualized course of study that will suit their particular needs.

“The M.J. student might be someone who, for example, works in the healthcare field, in the government, in human resources, or in law enforcement,” said Professor McGregor. “The common goal is a deeper understanding of the laws and regulations that they likely face every day in the workplace.” ♦

The Honorable Dixon Wright Prentice, '42

The Honorable Dixon Wright Prentice, '42, who was among the last of the judges directly elected to the Indiana Supreme Court, died July 20 in Tucson, Arizona. He was 95.

Prentice was an Associate Justice on the Indiana Supreme Court from 1971 to 1985. Earlier in Prentice's career, he had been a lawyer in Jeffersonville, Indiana. In 1970, Indiana voters amended the state constitution so that the governor would appoint one of three judicial candidates selected by a bipartisan commission, a change that went into effect in 1972. Prentice, who had never served as a judge or prosecutor, ran on the Democratic ticket in 1970 hoping to gain some recognition for a potential appointment later on. Instead, he was directly elected.

Prentice was born June 3, 1919, in Sellersburg, Indiana. He received an LL.B. in 1942 from the Indiana Law School in Indianapolis, now the IU Robert H. McKinney School of Law.

He married Phyllis Ropa December 20, 1941. He enlisted in the U.S. Navy as a seaman in 1942, and was commissioned as an ensign during his training. He served on an LST (landing ship, tanks) in the Europe, Africa and Middle East campaigns, and in 1944 his ship retrieved the wounded from the beaches of Normandy after the D-Day invasion. He remained in the Navy Reserve, retiring after 20 years as a Lt. Commander.

From 1946 to 1970, he practiced law in southern Indiana, where he was part of the firm Prentice & Prentice with his father and brother, Robert Prentice.

He drafted nearly 700 legal opinions during his years as associate justice, and served for many years as a commissioner of the National Conference on Uniform State Laws. Interviewed in 2008 for the book Justices of the Indiana Supreme Court, Prentice noted that his impact on the judiciary was probably lastingly felt in two trial rules he spearheaded. They set limits on how long a judge has to issue decisions, and are known as the "lazy judge rule." It was inspired by his frustrations as a lawyer in Clark County.

Prentice is survived by his wife, Phyllis Ropa Prentice; two children Penelope (Penny) Rauzi of Mount Vernon, Ohio, and William Wright Prentice of Tucson; and four grandchildren Richard Prentice, of Stewart, Florida, Alec Prentice of Melbourne, Florida, Robin Rauzi of Los Angeles, California, and Nicole Rauzi of Annapolis, Maryland. He was preceded in death by his son Peter Kimmel Prentice and his four siblings, Edith Alice (Lally) Dolian, Robert J. Prentice, Joy Goodwin, and Wilson E. (Buzz) Prentice. ♦

Dan Evans, '76, Speaks to Students at Leadership Luncheon

Dan Evans, '76, president and chief executive officer of Indiana University Health, was the speaker at the IU McKinney Law Leadership Luncheon on April 17 in the Faculty Lounge at Inlow Hall. Evans was named to his current post at the statewide healthcare system in 2002. He spoke at length about his role at IU Health, and how the connections he made during law school have had a positive impact on his career path. They are connections he maintains to this day, he said.

"Our leadership luncheon series is so beneficial for our students," said law school dean Andy Klein. "We are grateful to our alumnus, Dan Evans, for taking the time to share his perspectives about his career, and to offer advice to those in attendance. I am also grateful for his strong support of the school. Having leaders like Dan as part of the McKinney Law family are one of the many things that distinguish our school and make it a special place for students to study law and join the legal profession."

Evans' comments and insights left an impression on McKinney Law student, Lori Craig. "I was delighted to be invited to the Leadership Luncheon," she said. "As I complete my J.D. and health law certification, it is important to take opportunities to meet those who are currently practicing and learn about the practical issues being confronted in the health care industry and the legal field."

Prior to his affiliation with IU Health, Evans was a partner with the firm known then as Baker & Daniels, now Faegre Baker Daniels. ♦

The Samuel R. Rosen Professorships are named in honor of the late Judge Rosen, a respected member of Indiana's legal community. The 1933 graduate of Harvard Law School held a number of judicial posts after he moved to Indiana in 1963, including serving as deputy attorney general, an Indiana Supreme Court administrator, and the state's first senior judge accorded "at-large" judicial authority in Indiana. In 1992, Judge Rosen made a gift for the benefit of the law school to honor his Harvard classmate, Cleon H. "Bill" Foust, who served as dean of the school from 1967 until 1973. That gift supports these endowed professorships.
